ADDRESS TO OUR READERS.

ON THE COMPLETION OF THE TWENTY-EIGHTH VOLUME.

UPON the conclusion of our Twenty-eighth Volume, we have the pleasure to assure our numerous Readers, that, duly sensible of their patronage and preference, we shall leave no effort untried to support the spirit of our Publication. In addition to that accuracy of statement respecting the transactions of the Turf, which the ability and information of our Correspondents have lately enabled us to extend to a more considerable length than before, we hope not to forget the other sources of recreation and amusement, which have occasionally diversified our pages. And in order to give a greater latitude to the Feast of Wit, the late brevity of which has been remarked by some of our mirth-loving Readers, we shall in our next Volume adopt such an arrangement for an addition to this article, as will, we presume, with the et cœteras, continue to afford general satisfaction.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE Ode to Camberwell Grove not suiting our plan, the Author may have the copy at the Publisher's. It is not refused through any deficiency in merit, but as being of a cast too plaintive for a Magazine which always prefers pieces of humour, effusions of wit, or grotesque description, for its poetical department.

Sporting Intelligence Extraordinary, by HORATIO, is received, but came too late for insertion this month.

We are much obliged to an OLD SUBSCRIBER at Plymouth for his correction of the mistatement of the Hunters' Stakes run for at Totness, Devon, as it appeared in our last; but we are sorry his letter came too late for the present month.

MELEAGER DESTROYING THE CALEDONIAN BOAR.

Frontispiece to the 28th Volume.

THIS is a story so well known in fabulous history, that it is scarcely necessary to recite it.

The father of Meleager having neglected the altars of Diana, she sent a huge wild boar, that laid waste the whole country. Meleager and the princes and chiefs assembled to destroy this terrible animal, and among them was Atalanta. She first wounded the boar, and it was at last killed by Meleager.

The subsequent fate of Meleager, being unconnected with the subject of the plate, we shall here close, without adding more to this article.

THE KING'S PLATE.

MR. EDITOR,

SOME of your readers, no doubt, have always supposed, as I have done, that the King's Plates, annually run for at Newmarket, York, &c. &c. were the gift of the Crown; but lately looking into a little tract published in 1769, entitled—"Anecdotes relating to Horse Races," I found the following account of these sporting donations.

"Gentlemen went on breeding their horses so fine, for the sake of shape and speed only, without considering, that those which were only second, third, or fourth rates in speed, were then quite useless, until the reign of Queen Anne, when a public-spirited gentleman observing this inconvenience, left a sum of money out of his estate, the interest of which amounting to 1300 guineas, was for thirteen Plates or Purses, to be run for annually at such places as the Crown should appoint; whence they are called the King's or Queen's Plate or Guineas. The condition is, that each horse, &c. shall carry twelve stone weight, the best of three heats, over a four-mile course. By this method, a stronger and more useful breed was soon raised; and if a horse did not win the guineas, he was yet strong enough to make a good hunter. By these crossings, as jockies term it, we have horses of full blood, three quarters blood, or half-bred horses, suitable to carry any burthens: whence the English horses are allowed to be the best; and are greatly esteemed by foreigners." Your's &c.

AN EPITAPH

In Nunnington Chancel, near Malton, Yorkshire,

UPON the famous Jockey, commonly called TOM JACKSON, who was Trainer and Rider to Cuthbert Routh, Esq. of Dinsdale, Yorkshire; and afterwards to Jenison Shafto, Esq. of Newmarket.

TO THE MEMORY OF
THOMAS JACKSON,
Who was so well known for his extraordinary Performances on the Turf.
He was born at Thornton-in-the-Street, near York;
Bred up at Black Hambleton;
And crowned with Glory at Newmarket.
He died at Nunnington,
Worn out in the service of his Friends,
February 22, 1766,
Aged 62.
His faithful and meritorious Services
Gained him this Monument,
And afford a useful Lesson to the humbler part of Mankind,
Who may learn from hence,
That Men of Honesty and Industry
May rise to Glory,
And have their Memories recorded,
As well as
The Great and Noble.

PATENTS, REPOSITORY OF ARTS, &c.

IN our last number we had the pleasure of introducing to the notice of our readers, accounts of two new inventions for which His Majesty has been graciously pleased to grant letters-patent: namely, Mr. Clark's, for newly invented horse-shoes; and the Rev. Mr. Milton's, for rendering carriages more secure from overturning.

It was our intention to have referred to the source from whence we had drawn our information.—The references which we made to a plate, pointed to the engraving that accompanied the specification in the fifty-first number of the Repository of Arts, the work from which we extracted the articles above alluded to. It may be proper, therefore, now to inform such of our readers as are not acquainted with that valuable work, that a number of it appears monthly; containing the specifications of important or interesting patents, accurately copied from the records in Chancery, with engravings of the drawings; extracts from the transactions of Philosophical societies, and English and foreign journals; notices of all new patents for inventions and discoveries; and, indeed, accounts of every subject relating to the improvement of the useful arts, manufactures, and agriculture.

EXTRACT

EXTRACT OF SPORTING SUBJECTS, &c.

From the descriptive Catalogue of the Morland Gallery.

THE SPORTSMAN REFRESHING.—SNOW-PIECE.

THE boldness of this production is its chief merit. The assemblage of circumstances that surround a winter-scene are properly introduced:—

.... "The weary clouds,
Slow meeting, mingle into solid gloom."

The light is distributed with great judgment.

THE HUNT.

The foremost object, is a man thrown, and his horse taking into the wood, followed by two huntsmen in full chase. The spirit given in the delineation of this subject is very great; the beauty of the perspective forms a delightful contrast with the broken surface of the fore ground and rich foliage of the wood.

THE CORN BIN.

Nothing can be more happily executed than the whole figure and attitude of the white horse; his countenance and eye, and his pawing with his foot, strongly mark his impatience to receive his accustomed allowance of food. The artist has here given an anatomy of the whole animal so perfect as to be the subject of an excellent study. Nor must we lose sight of the other, who, though more passive, still betrays a characteristic anxiety.—The interior of the bin is wonderfully fine, and the action of the men peculiarly appropriate. In short, it will scarcely be in the power of any man to give a more just and accurate view of the inside of a stable. The white horse was a favourite one belonging to Morland, and was many years the companion of his eccentric journies. The public have had an opportunity of admiring the beauties of this painting, which have been faithfully copied, in an elegant engraving, by Mr. Smith.

GULL-SHOOTING.

The figures are very characteristically expresssed: the dark massy rock, that bids defiance to the violence of the waves, and the light reflected on the white cliffs, display infinite judgment and observation.

THE HIGH METTLED RACER.

It requires little else to be said of this fine painting, than that it is in his best style, and executed in the year 1792, so completely has the artist entered into the minutiæ of the celebrated ballad written by Mr. Dibdin, sen.

VERSE III.

Grown aged, us'd up, and turn'd out of the stud,
Lame, spavin'd, and wind-gall'd, but yet with some blood;
While knowing postillions his pedigree trace,
Tell his dam won this sweepstakes, his sire that race,
And what matches he won to the hostlers count o'er,
As they loiter their time at some hedge ale-house door:
While the harness sore galls, and the spurs his sides goad,
The high-mettled racer's a hack on the road.

IV.

Till at last, having labour'd, drudg'd early and late,
Bow'd down by degrees, he bends on to his fate;
Blind, old, lean, and feeble, he tugs round a mill,
Or draws sand, till the sand of his hour-glass stands still.
&c. &c. &c.

RETURN

RETURN OF THE POST-BOY.

The peculiarity of the scene is marked with much novelty. On the left the village is protected by lofty mountains, coloured with remarkable softness: the attitudes of the horses and their riders are very judicious: the subject is in itself familiar and interesting.

SNOW-PIECE, WITH HORSES.

This piece describes very finely the rude desolation of winter: the chilly aspect of the country, and the distressed appearance of the cattle, endeavouring to shield themselves from the effects of the cold, render it a fac-simile of nature.

THE BLUE MACAW.

THIS curious bird, now the property of Dr. Thornton, of Hind-street, Manchester-square, London, was many years in servitude at Mr. Brookes's Menagerie in the Hay-market. Like the other birds of that species, he was chained by the leg by a short chain to his perch, defended by tin, and fed upon scalded bread. Here he learned to imitate the cackling of fowls, barking of dogs, his exhibitors, and other inhuman sounds.

Dr. Thornton bought him for 15 guineas, to grace his museum, or botanical exhibition. When in a confined room in Bond-street, he made the screaming noises so offensive in this tribe; he seemed sulky and unhappy. Being brought to the Doctor's house, his botanical exhibition being closed, the Doctor, from motives of humanity, and for experiment, took away the chain that confined him to his perch.— His feet were so cramped, and the muscles weakened from long disuse, that he could not walk, he tottered at every step, and appeared in a few minutes only greatly fatigued. In order that he might not clamber by his feet and bill down the upright pole supporting his perch, at a right angle, a double stand was made as with flowers, and this serves as a parapet wall, which prevents his coming farther. His liberated feet soon acquired uncommon agility; his plumage grew more resplendent; and he became completely happy: no longer he indulged in screams of discontent, and all his gestures denoted gratitude. His food was now changed, and he breakfasts with the family, having toast and butter, or bread and butter; and dines upon potatoes, hard dumplings, with fruit occasionally after dinner. Like other parrots, he never drinks.— His smell is uncommonly quick. He marks the time of meals by a continued agitation of the wings, and running up and down the pole, and a pleasing note of request.

When he receives his food, he half opens his wings, contracts the pupils of his eyes, and utters a pleasing note of thankfulness. If he gets what he is not very fond of, he takes it in his left leg, and having fed on it, throws it down; but if the food be nice and abundant, he carefully conveys it to his tin reservoir, and leaves for another repast, what he cannot eat in this. —He soon forgot his barbarous sounds, and now imitates words, saying, "Poll—Macaw—Turn-him out—Pretty fellow—Saucy fellow—What 's o'clock."—Laughing and calling out the names of the Doctor's children. If any is hurt, he gives the first alarm; nor does he desist until they are attended to. The Doctor's son, observing the sagacity of this bird, undertook to instruct instruct him. He taught him, at word of command, to descend from his perch, and stand upon his finger; then by another order, he turns himself downwards, and hangs upon the forefinger by one foot, although the body is swung about with much violence. Being next asked how a certain person should be served, the spectator attends an answer, but the bird, by his bill, is pendent on the finger, and has all the appearance of one hanging. At desire he extends his wings, and shews their beauty.

He next fans the spectator; and being put upon the ground, walks backwards as readily as forwards, with his two toes in front and two behind. He then clambers like a sailor up the mizen mast, and with his two open mandibles embraces his perch, which is nearly two inches in thickness. Placed there, he is asked, if a certain gentleman was to come here how he would serve him? he shakes his head several times, raises his wings, erects all his feathers, opens his mouth, catches hold of the finger, and, seemingly in earnest, keeps on biting, as though he would take it off, opposing every resistance; and when he liberates the finger, utters a scream. He is then asked, how he would serve his master? when he gently bites the finger, and caresses it with his beak and tongue, and holds his head down, as expecting it to be scratched. Nor is this all, being given a nut on his stand below, he mounts the upright stick, and the nut somehow disappears. He then, at word of command, presents it to the company, holds it in his paw, and cracks it. The nut was hid under the tongue, in the hollow of the under mandible. Given a peach-stone, he finds out its natural division, and after many efforts opens it for the kernel. When any nuts are presented to him, he is in one universal agitation; and he has so much sagacity, that without cracking, when he takes up a bad nut, he very indignantly throws it on the ground. He is remarkably fond of music, and with motions of his feet along the perch, movement of his wings, and his head moving backwards and forwards, he dances to all lively tunes, and keeps exact time. If any person sings in wrong measure, he quickly desists, and begins to one whose ear keeps time.

He is very friendly to strangers, puts on a terrific appearance towards children for fear of injury, and is very jealous of infants. In rainy weather the blue feathers look green, and also in clear weather when there are vapours in the sky.

What proves a peculiar sagacity in his imitations is, that these he effects sometimes without his voice; for instance, there is a scissars-grinder who comes into the street where the bird is every Friday. All the parrots have a file in the inside of the upper mandible, with which they grind down their under bill, and in this they are employed for an hour every evening. This sound people usually mistake for snoring. This scrapping was attempted, but the nice ear marked the difference, and he had recourse to his claws, which he struck against the perch, armed with tin, and observing the time of the turning of the wheel, he effected a most exact imitation, which he repeats every Friday. Sometimes the child's pap would be taken to the window and beaten with a spoon; this he would immediately imitate, by striking his broad bill against the sides of his perch.

The light of candles awakens him, and he will then dance, and discriminate

minate persons; but presented with sugar, or any food, he often misses it. He will frequently invite to be held upon the hands to flutter his wings; but he seems to have no inclination to fly, and appears perfectly happy in the partial liberty he enjoys.

Macaws attain the age of from one hundred and thirty to two hundred years.

DONCASTER RACES.

THE Meeting at Doncaster was honoured by the presence of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, accompanied by the Duke of Clarence; and the assemblage of fashionable company was the largest we ever witnessed. The bounds allotted to our present Racing Calendar not permitting us to include the whole of these races, the following is a brief summary of the sport.

Tuesday, Sept. 23.—The Corporation Plate of 50l. for three-year olds and upwards, was won by Mr R. Prince's Flighty, beating Mr Mellish's Off-she-goes, Sir W. Gererd's Young Chariot, Sir M. Masterman Sykes's Sir Sacripant, Mr Hotham's Bounce, and Mr Clifton's Josephina.

Wednesday, Sept. 24.—The second year of the Doncaster Stakes of 10gs each, with 20gs added, was won by Lord Darlington's Trafalgar, beating Mr Garforth's Vesta, Mr Mellish's Streatlam-Lass, and Lord Strathmore's black colt by Sir Peter Teazle. The Gold Cup, value 100gs, for all ages, was won by Mr Garforth's grey colt by Hambletonian, beating Lord Darlington's Trafalgar. Six others also started, but were not placed.—The renewed Doncaster Stakes, a Subscription of 10gs each, with 20gs added by the Corporation, for all ages, was won by Lord Darlington's Trafalgar, beating Mr Garforth's Vesta, Mr Mellish's Streatlam-Lass, and Lord Strathmore's black colt by Sir Peter Teazle.

Thursday, Sept. 25.—A Sweepstakes of 20gs each, for three years old fillies, was won by Lord Strathmore's brown, by Sir Peter Teazle, beating Mr Sitwell's Pipylina, Mr Mellish's Streatlam Lass, Sir M. M. Sykes's Miss Teazle Hornpipe, Mr Hodgson's bay, by Moorcock, Lord Belhaven's bay, by Beningbrough, and Mr Clowes's bay by Stamford. The Sweepstakes of 50gs each, was won by the Hon. Martin Hawke's Prince Bangradion, beating Sir H. T. Vane's Stop-Thief, and Mr Treacher's Sportsmistress. The 100l. Plate for three and four-year olds, was won by Mr Garforth's gr c by Hambletonian, beating Mr Peirse's bay filly, by Beningbrough, Mr Clifton's Fyldener, Mr Watt's ches colt, by Ormond, Mr Mellish's Young Eagle, Mr Brandling's Smasher, Mr S. Duncombe's Hipswell-Lass, and Lord Fitzwilliam's Minstrel.

A number of matches were run in the course of the meeting, affording considerable sport; all of which, with the races above noticed, will be detailed at length in our next Racing Calendar.

In the race for the Gold Cup on Wednesday, when the horses had passed the Stand, Trafalgar was supposed to be winning easy, when Jack Tate (who rode Mr Garforth's colt) a sagacious Yorkshire lad, who had run his horse wide, and unnoticed by Peirse, came up, struggled for a few lengths with Trafalgar, and beat the all-knowing Bishoprick man, much against his cunning and smiling knowledge, and reminded him of J. Hutchinson's useful lesson—"That the race was never won whilst they had passed the Ending-Post."

THE IRISH JURYMAN.

MR. EDITOR,

AS I observed a few months ago an article from the Universalist's Miscellany in your Magazine, respecting an instance of sagacity in a horse, I thought you would have no objection to an extract from another Magazine, though published by dissenters*, provided the matter be analogous with your own. The editor of the Monthly Repository of Theology and General Literature informs his readers, that the following extract is taken from Butcher's Excursion from Sidmouth to Chester, in two vols. 12mo. Your's &c.

SELECTOR.

" A JUDGE on the north-west circuit in Ireland, came to the trial of a cause in which much of the local consequence of certain gentlemen in the neighbourhood was concerned. It was the case of a landlord's prosecution against a poor man, his tenant, for assault and battery, committed on the person of the prosecutor by the defendant, in the defence of his only child, an innocent and beautiful girl, from ravishment. Not only the bench, but the whole bar, dined with the prosecutor's father the day before the trial; and some of them praise the venison and the claret even to this day.

" When this poor man was brought into court, and put to the bar, the prosecutor appeared, and swore most manfully to every tittle in the indictment. He was cross-examined by the jurors, who were honest tradesmen and reputable farmers. The poor man had no lawyers to tell his story; he pleaded his own cause—and he pleaded, not to the fancy, but to the judgment and the heart. The jury found him —Not Guilty.

" The court was enraged; but the auditors, gladdened to exultation, uttered a shout of applause.—The judge told the jury, they must go back to the jury-room, and reconsider the matter; adding, he was astonished they should return so infamous a verdict. The Jury bowed, went back, and in a quarter of an hour returned, when the foreman, a venerable old man, thus addressed the bench: " My Lord, in compliance with your desire, we went back to our jury-room, but as we then found no reason to alter our opinion or our verdict, we return it to you in the same words as before—Not Guilty. We heard your Lordship's language of reproof, but we do not accept it as truly or warrantably applying to us. It is true, my Lord, that individually concerned, in our private capacities, we may be poor insignificant men; therefore, in that light, we claim nothing out of this box above the common regards of our humble but honest stations; but, my Lord, assembled here as a Jury, we cannot be insensible to the great and constitutional importance of the department we now fill. We feel, my Lord, that we are appointed, as you are, by the law and the constitution—not only as an impartial tribunal to judge between the king and his subjects, the offended and the offender, but that we act in a situation of still greater confidence; for we form, as a jury, the barrier of the people against the possible influence, prejudice, passion, or corruption of the bench.—To you, my Lord, meeting you without these walls, I, for my own part, might possibly measure my respect by your private virtues; in this place your private character is invisible; it is veiled in your official one, and to your conduct in that only we can look. We do not in this business presume to offer the bench the smallest degree of disrespect, much less of insult; we pay it the respect which one tribunal should pay to another, for the common honour of both. This jury, my Lord, did not accuse that bench of partiality, prejudice, infamous decision, nor yet of influence, corruption, oppression, or tyranny: no, we looked to it as the mercy-seat of royalty—as the sanctuary of truth and justice; still, my Lord, we cannot blot from our minds the records of our school-books, nor erase the early inscriptions written on the first page of our intellects and memories. Here we must be mindful that monarchs and judges are but fallible mortals, and that the mercy-seat of royalty and the sanctuary of justice have been polluted by a Tresilian, a Scraggs, and a Jefferies."

* Fas est ab hoste doceri, being an inviolable maxim with us, we cannot have the least objection to any contributions from the works of dissenters or others. We feel no reluctance in accepting of any thing that may add to the feast of reason: convinced that nothing has tended to embitter social enjoyment so much as a rancourous party-spirit, which, we flatter ourselves, is at present decreasing every day.

The bench frowned at these words, but the intrepid Juror thus proceeded: "Nay, my Lord, I am a poor man, but I am a free-born subject of the kingdom of Ireland—a member of the constitution: nay, I am now higher, for I am the representative thereof. I therefore claim for myself and fellow-jurors the liberty of speech; and if I am refused it here, I shall assume it before the people at the door of this court-house, and tell them why I deliver my mind there instead of in this place."

The bench here resumed its dignified complacency, and the honest orator continued his address: "I say my Lord, that we have nothing to do with your private character; we know you here only in that of Judge, and as such we would respect you; you know nothing of us but as a Jury, and in that station we look to you for reciprocal respect, because we know of no man, however high his titles or his rank, in whom the law or the constitution would warrant an unprovoked insult towards that tribunal in which they have vested the dearest and most valuable privileges they possess. I before said, my Lord, that we are met here not individually, nor do we assume pre-eminence; but in the sacred character of a jury, we should be wanting in reverence to the constitution itself, if we did not look for the respect of every man who regards it. We sit here, my Lord, sworn to give a verdict according to our consciences, and the best of our judgments, on the evidence before us. We have, in our own minds, acquitted our duty as honest men. If we have erred, we are answerable, not to your Lordship, nor to the bench, nor to the king who placed you there, but to a higher power—THE KING OF KINGS."

The bench was dumb, the bar was silent; astonishment and applause murmured through the crowd, and the poor man was discharged!

Singular

Singular Mode of Ejectment—Mogol Archers.

From the Same.

MR. EDITOR,

I BELIEVE the following passage from the 26th of Ecclesiasticus, ver. 27, has puzzled commentators. "A loud crying woman and a scold, shall be sought for to drive away the enemy." It undoubtedly refers to some custom formerly prevalent in the East.—I do not, however, remember to have seen an elucidation of it, either in Harmer or other writers, who have undertaken to explain difficult passages in the bible, by a reference to the customs and manners of the inhabitants of the Eastern nations.

By a modern traveller of credit it is said, that at Benarco and the adjacent provinces, a person desirous of dispossessing a tenant from his house, and who is unwilling to wait the tedious process of the law, applies for the assistance of a woman who is by profession a notorious scold. This woman posts herself at sun-rising opposite the tenant's dwelling, and there pours forth every species of abuse against the poor man that she can invent.

This conduct draws together the populace, whose applause she receives in proportion to her vociferation and perseverance, for which she is amply rewarded by her employer. Whenever the woman has occasion to retire for the purposes of refreshment, she plants her staff in the ground opposite the house, which, through a singular superstition, none dare remove, or even touch during her absence; and on her return she re-commences the attack, and thus continues from day to day, till the man is glad to give his landlord possession of the house.

UNDER the head of literary intelligence, it appears that a letter has recently been received from M. Rehmann, the physician in the suit of the Russian embassy to China, dated Kiachta on the frontiers of China, October 14th, 1805; in which he says that he has vaccinated a great number of the children of the Mogols. "These people," continues M. Rehmann, "have retained the simple manners and customs of their ancestors. They live in tents, and still make use of bows and arrows, which they employ with such dexterity and precision, that when they went out with the Russians of the ambassador's suit, they killed six times as much game as the latter, though provided with excellent fowling-pieces."

DEMI DIALOGUES;

OR,

HUMOURS OF BARTHOLOMEW FAIR.

HAVING heard much of the famous Bartholomew Fair, I lately hastened there to make my observations and gratify my curiosity. On my arrival at the spot, I was distracted with the discordant notes of various instruments: and the din and clamour occasioned by the different exclamations of the crowd, renders it impossible to give any other than the following broken description of them.

"O, Sir! pray don't stop the opening up."—"My dear Mr. Fig, we have lost Master Jackey."—"Four a penny, oysters, all fat oysters, O!"—"See, see! there! there! there! the slight-of-hand-man."—"Ah! you blackguard! take your hand out of my pocket."

 The

"The first thing you see is the king and queen, and all the royal family in wax-work: the next thing you see is a view of Kew, see the boats and barges on the water as large as life; the next thing you see is the glorious battle of Trafalgar: look on the right-hand side you see the ancient temple of Joe the thunderer; see what a glorious sight that appears to be, there: stand back, you sweep! only a halfpenny a piece here!"—"Gadzoons, Nell, why there be a man yonder eating vire!"—"Sam! Sam! where are you?"—"O Lord! I have lost my shoe and cloak, and got my best bonnet tore all to pieces!"—"Come who's for a glass of good gin, or a slice of good gingerbread."—"Walk in, ladies and gentlemen; the royal elephant is here, the royal tiger is here, and the royal lions from the royal Tower of London!"—"Up and win 'em! up, and win 'em!"—"O, daddy, daddy, do buy me that there doll there!!"

"Ah! Parson Spintext, is that you; why you look like the spotted negro on the other side of the fair; not less than a dozen barbers must have come in contact with your black coat!"—"Ah! neighbour Needle, is it you? I have just come from the exhibition of three-fingered Jack; and have just been surrounded by a score of light-fingered Jacks, who were encouraging a battle between two drunkards; where, after my corns had been trampled upon, and my ribs pummelled for half an hour, I made a shift to decamp from the scene of action, with the loss of my hat and wig, a manuscript sermon, a pocket handkerchief, and a plumb-cake. Mrs. Spintext and her daughter I have left the Lord knows how! the Lord knows where! had I not listened to their importunities I should not have come here, but they would fain persuade me that they never see any pleasure."

Here I was involuntarily hurried away from my station, like a feather in a whirlwind, by a sudden and a general movement of the mob, in which nothing could be distinguished by the ear but the shouts of men and boys, and the screams of women and children.

John Morris Flindall,

PAMPHLETS.

A WRITER in the beginning of the last century, when pamphleteering was all the rage, makes the following remarks on these productions:—

"Pamphlets become more and more daily amusements to the curious, idle, and inquisitive; pastimes to gallants and coquets; chat to the talkative, stories for nurses, toys for children, fans for misses, food to the needy, and practisings to newsmongers; catch-words to informers, instructions to the ignorant; aid to the wise, fuel to the envious; weapons to the revengeful, poison to the unfortunate, balsam to the wounded, employment to the lazy, opportunity to enemies, condemnation to the wicked, speculation to the godly, trials of skill to the quarrelsome and proud, a comfort to the afflicted, appeals from the injured to the public, poverty to their authors, gain to the lucky, fatal to the unlucky, satisfaction to the oppressed, a vent to melancholy, a heart-ease to censurers, fabulous materials to romancers. In a word, pamphlets literally unite contradictions, and are occasional conformists in all manner of acceptations and capacities, as well as in vicissitude of matter and stile."

ON THE Effects of Boxing Matches on the Lower Classes.

MR. EDITOR,

TO encourage those exercises which are best calculated to promote national spirit, if not the duty, is certainly the policy of those who govern a state. Plans may be ably contrived, and yet want success in execution; nor can success be expected where care has been taken to remove spirit. There are very few who cannot discover, that effeminacy is ill-calculated to carry schemes, however brilliant in theory; yet even under this conviction we see effeminacy nurtured and encouraged by the law of the realm.

I believe, Sir, Pugilism is objected to, because it draws together what is called a riotous assembly. I have never heard any other objection. In a civilized country, a riotous assembly, it will be acknowledged, is an evil requiring the prompt interference of the magistracy. The grounds of such meetings may be public, and the consequences, if not timely prevented, may be dangerous to a state. The party would gradually increase; arms would be resorted to, and the number of an undisciplined rabble at length become formidable to a disciplined force. This kind of tumultuous meeting has consequences which were foreseen, and wisely checked. But it was an unfortunate circumstance, that by a law in such cases perfectly just, a check should be thrown on innocent assemblies of a very different nature.

This then is my complaint.—But there are many who inveigh against the evil tendency of such exhibitions; they say, the consequence is riot. Now there are many species of riots, and surely some distinction should be made between their different shades of notoriety. One riot may end in rebellion, another in private quarrels; but the riot attending a boxing match is nothing more than a confusion of voices, and the enthusiastic applause of fortitude and spirit.—Those who are impartial enough to consider these different shades, will likewise have candour to acknowledge the harmless tendency of what they honour with the appellation of a tumult. What is harmless should not be suppressed with the same rigour as what is actually pernicious.

With equal violence do they insist on another argument against boxing. They contend, it is a barbarous diversion, and calculated to harden the heart. This may be as much the language of too-elevated refinement and effeminacy, as the last was the tone of ignorance. Many quarrels must naturally arise in large societies, and recourse cannot be had to the sword. This would be an evil that would bring us upon a par of degeneracy with the Italians, and disgrace us as a nation of cut-throats. Every Englishman resorts to the weapons with which nature has armed him. He has courage enough to stand the hazard of a severe contest, rather than take advantage of what weapons he may be possessed of. A proof, we may conclude, of national spirit, rather than national barbarity. It is true it hardens the heart to all impressions of fear. I am one of those who think, in spite of this this argument on the barbarity of boxing-matches, that domestic love and benevolence is still the striking characteristic of the English vulgar. It may not be displeasing to your readers, to quote a ludicrous passage in point, from that admirable author, Fielding. "Here," says he, after describing Tom Jones's encounter with Thwackum, "here we cannot help expressing a pious wish that all quarrels were to be decided by those weapons only, with which nature, knowing what is good for us, has armed us; and that cold iron were to be used in digging no bowels but those of the earth. Then would war, the pastime of monarchs, be inoffensive; and battles between two great armies might be fought at the particular desire of several ladies of quality, who, with the kings themselves, might be spectators of the conflict. Then might the field this moment be well strewed with human carcases, and the next, the dead men, or infinitely the greatest part of them, might get up like Mr. Bayes' troops, and march off, either at the sound of the drum or fiddle, as should be previously agreed upon." DOCKING HORSES, &c.

THESE barbarous customs are in this country very prevailing: the former, under the pretence that a bushy tail collects the dirt of the roads; and the latter, cutting the ears, from the idea that they are rendered more elegant in their appearance. Thus, from ideal necessity, we deprive them of two parts of the body principally instrumental not only to their own ease and comfort, but in their utility to us. By taking away their ears, the funnels are destroyed which they always direct to the place from which any sound is heard, and they are thus sometimes rendered nearly deaf. And in the loss of their tail they find even a still greater inconvenience. During summer they are perpetually teazed with swarms of insects, which they have now no means of lashing off; and in winter they are deprived of a necessary protection against the cold.

But of all others the custom that we have adopted—for it is found in no other nation than this—of nicking them, is the most useless and absurd. It is an affecting sight to go into the stable of some eminent horse-dealer, and there behold a range of fine and beautiful steeds with their tails cut and slashed, tied up by pulleys to give them force, suffering such torture that they sometimes never recover the savage gashes they have received; and for what is all this done?—that they may hold their tails somewhat higher than they otherwise would, and be for ever deprived of the power of moving the joints of them as a defence against flies!

The author of that well-known poem, "The Farmer's Boy," in an address to his master's horse, styles his

. . . . "Short-clipt remnant of a tail,
A moving mockery, a useless name,
A living proof of cruelty and shame."

He further exclaims,

"Shame to the man, whatever fame he bore,
Who took from thee what man can ne'er restore,

Thy

Thy weapon of defence, thy chiefest good,
When swarming flies, contending, suck
thy blood."

I have another abuse to notice, observable in those who shoe horses. The stupid blacksmith, in order to save himself a little trouble, will frequently apply the shoe when hot to the horse's foot, that it may burn for itself a bed in the hoof, and fit it for its reception. "The utmost severity," says Lord Pembroke, "ought to be inflicted on all those who clap shoes on hot. This unpardonable laziness of farriers, in making feet thus to fit shoes, instead of shoes to fit the feet, dries up the hoofs, and utterly destroys them." It is of the most ruinous consequence, hardening and cracking the hoofs, and bringing on even the most fatal disorders. The joints, the wind, and the eyes, are injured by it, and the gross humours which naturally descend to the feet, and ought to be carried off by insensible perspiration, are detained, from the hardness of the surface they have to penetrate. Dr. Bardsley and Mr. J. Lawrence,

ON

POPULAR SPORTS AND PUGILISM.

MR. EDITOR,

WE are informed by the public prints, that Dr. Bardsley has lately laid before the Philosophical Society of Manchester, an elaborate paper on the use and abuse of popular sports and exercises, as a national object. The doctor, in his disquisition on popular sports, or modes of amusements adopted both by the ancients and moderns, very humanely and rationally condemns all such as cannot be exercised without wanton cruelty and injustice, ranging in this class, particularly the baiting of animals. Those sports which are free from this objection have found an able advocate in Dr. Bardsley, who farther seems to entertain a very good opinion of, and even strongly to recommend the exercise of the pugilistic school, to be ranked, in his opinion, among those athletic exercises which impart address and strength to the body, and confer courage and fortitude on the mind. The doctor even goes so far as to say—"The goverment that should attempt, with a despotic and severe authority, to contract the exertions of self-confidence, and a moderate exercise of just resentment, could only expect to rule over a nation of slaves." After reprobating in severe and proper terms the inhuman and disgusting barbarity, American boxing, he observes as a striking fact—"That in those parts of this kingdom where pugilism is least practised, and where personal disputes are decided by the exertions of savage strength and ferocity, a fondness for barbarous and bloody sports prevails. In some parts of Lancashire, bull-baiting and manslaying are common practices.—There is no established rule of honour to save the weak from the strong." Hence, Doctor Bardsley would have boxing encouraged.—He suggests, that, in public schools and large manufactories, some pains might be taken to introduce the system of boxing, and the laws of honour by which it is regulated.

In justice to Mr. Lawrence, it ought to be stated, that the above sentiments were published by him some years since, in his "Philosophical and Practical Treatise on Horses;" a work, indeed, generally esteemed esteemed of the curious and eccentric kind, but which nevertheless is obviously the result of a whole life of practice, and governed throughout by the genuine principles of humanity. The work, it must be allowed, is of rather too free a cast for the precisian; but surely a strong practical inculcation of the general duties of justice and humanity, and of the sacred rights of property, ought with Englishmen to weigh something in the balance against a few irregular flights from the beaten track. The substance must surely be of as much consequence as the shadow, at least to those whose humane feelings and sense of justice are of the real and substantial, not of the secondary and pretended kind. As far as the writer of this article has either read or inquired, Mr. Lawrence's book is purely original on the subject of justice to brute animals; no author before him, whether ancient or modern, having attempted to discriminate on the case; and without due discrimination all opinions and practices on the subject, besides being useless, have the dangerous tendency of inspiring ridicule and aversion, and of thereby increasing tenfold the sufferings of those miserable victims which it might be sincerely intended to relieve. For example, what possible degree of reason, common sense, or utility, can exist in jumbling together in a general lumping condemnation, the fair and legitimate contentions of horses in the race, and of men on the pugilistic stage, with the foul play and the infernal torments with which the lives of poor animals, endowed perhaps with the most exquisite feelings, are gradually worried out by a mob of cold-blooded cowards, and stupid, heedless, and thick-sculled fools? Mr. Lawrence has warmly recommended what he has denominated "the rights of beasts," meaning, it is to be presumed, their claims on the justice and humanity of man, to the legislature of the country; and it must have given him great satisfaction to find that the magistracy of the metropolis have since taken those rights into their especial protection, and that in consequence, no brutal proprietor of an animal can now torture it with impunity, under the old senseless pretence, that it is his own property. The country magistrates, it is fervently to be hoped, will universally follow this laudable and humane example. In this work will be also found an interesting estimate of the pretensions of our various veterinary writers, and of the comparative merits of the old and new veterinary schools.

The following extract, Mr. Editor, I beg leave to introduce in your entertaining and instructive miscellany, with the additional request of a grain of allowance for a free sentence or two, which would not, perhaps, readily pass muster before a meeting of the society for the suppression of vice.

"The noble old English custom of fighting with those natural weapons, the fists, now fashionably styled pugilism, stands with me in the same predicament as the last subject, namely, it has no relation to our treatment of brute animals; but the reader will find by what follows, that boxing is a theme which I should very reluctantly have passed unnoticed. On its principle not a word need be said, that being unexceptionable, at least on this side the millenium, when the saints will, in troth, have infinitely more agreeable recreation, and when the chanting three or four staves of a spritual song will be held a far superior gratification gratification to the receiving as many sound douces in the chops in a sparring-match. The practice of English boxing is equally unexceptionable with the principle, being so strictly consonant with the rules of justice and morality, as to form one of the greatest glories of the country. I know not whether it be committing myself to say, that an English blackguard learns more humanity and good morals in seeing a regular boxing-match, than it is probable he would in hearing five dozen of sermons. The appointment of umpires and seconds, the shaking of hands previous to the set-to, as much as to say, we mean to contend fairly, and like men; the general solicitude and caution in the spectators, that perfect equity take place between the contending parties, that no foul blow be struck, and that the fallen and the vanquished be protected; and lastly, the parting salute, when the conqueror seems to have generously divested himself of the haughtiness of his triumph, the conquered to have resigned with a natural and manly submission, and both to have disburthened their hearts of all malice or appetite of revenge, is, upon the whole, and in all its parts, so excellent a practical system of ethics as no other country can boast, and has chiefly contributed to form the characteristic humanity of the English nation."—Vol. ii. p. 29 Philosophical and Practical Treatise on Horses.

"The magistrates of our own country will, I hope, be wary in their attempts to restrain the privileges of Englishmen, even in their contentions. Granting it true, that boxing has such an important moral effect upon the vulgar mind, it were surely an impolitic step to discourage it, in compliment to fanaticism, hypocrisy, or mistaken ideas of humanity. Public encouragement it needs none, being, as it were, bound up in the very nature of the English people, amongst whom there are to be found, at every period, individuals enough, emulous of patronising the pugilistic art; yet, to keep alive an art, schools and practice are required. In countries where commerce and manufactures universally prevail, habits of delicacy, love of ease, and an inaptitude for defence, will invariably be introduced with length of time: amongst the inhabitants of such countries, it must be madness to check the principle of martial spirit under any legitimate form.

"I shall decline the inquiry how far the practice of pugilism would be consistent with our established ideas of gentility, but hold myself warranted by reason—all the warrant which ought to be required in any possible case—strongly to recommend the manly exercise of the pugilistic school to all ranks. Nothing contributes more to brace the sinews, open the chest, and to impart a firm and vigorous tone to the whole body, at the same time affording a very agreeable exercise of the mental faculties. It forms an erect and graceful carriage, and produces that ease and adroitness in the use of the limbs in which many people are naturally so deficient. In fine, the art of manual defence supplies the want of bodily strength, and may oftentimes prove an excellent shield to a weak man against casual and vulgar aggression.

"I have attempted, and hope I have succeeded in the proof, that neither pleasure nor profit in anywise require us to dispense with the laws of justice and humanity, since those laws, taken even in the strictest sense of necessity impede neither; and that it is a wretched mistake mistake to dignify with the name of pleasure those phrensical emotions which arise in the mind at witnessing the distresses and tortures of other creatures. Those who are so ready to condemn a man for uttering truths, seem unconscious, and ought to be reminded, that they are casting reflections upon nature herself. The small prospect of immediate concurrence and success, ought not to deter the moralist, whose gratification and reward properly subsists in the simple performance of the duty. The prejudices and errors of the human mind must be worn away gradually and by the constant attrition of just moral argumentation."

With gallantry of pilgrim's kisses."

DISCRIMINATOR.

ANECDOTE OF THE LATE MATT HORSLEY, THE NOTED FOX-HUNTER.

WHEN servant to Mr. C——, a gentleman in the neighbourhood of Scarborough, Matt was in the habit of having to attend upon a certain parson an occasional visitor at his master's; and who, rather more through penuriousness than poverty, generally paid his vails with "Good night, Matthew." This, it is reasonable to suppose, did not settle well upon Matt's stomach; for at that time, no doubt, he could spend a little more than his wages, and of course had no objection to an easy-got shilling.—Though it could never be said of Matt, that he harboured in his bosom the baser passions of revenge, yet he liked with all his heart a smart retort for the sake of fun; and it was not long before accident, or rather the parson's frugality, gave him opportunity of full gratification. It happened that the parson, by appointment, was to make a journey with Mr. C——; and that he might be ready to start with his company, or rather perhaps to save his supper at home, came over night. The morning proved rainy, with strong indications of continued wet, and the parson had unfortunately brought his better hat, which had cost him a serious sum, and which he well knew the rain would totally spoil. This circumstance gave him much serious alarm, and probably would have disappointed him of the pleasures of the day, had not his inventive powers, which were always wonderfully ready and happy on his own behalf, hinted the expedient of borrowing Matt's, and of leaving his own in safe coverture behind. The boon was as readily granted as asked; and Mr. C. and the parson commenced their journey, followed by Matt, dressed in the parson's new hat, disfigured by having the brim slouched about his ears. The object of the journey being accomplished, the travellers returned dropping wet, having rode through a heavy and continued rain. On the following morning, the parson being about to return home, inquired for his hat, which was produced quite drenched with wet; and though partly frantic through the sudden impulse of anger, he still had the presence of mind to call for Matt, and inquire the cause which involved this ruin; and received for answer—uttered with that ready composure which Matt never was in want of—"Wya, Sur, you gat mane; and you sartantly didn't think I was sike a feal as to follow you i' the rain bareheaded."

A RAMBLE

A RAMBLE
Along the Southern Part of the Isle of Wight.

Appuldercombe—The Bath—The Vineyards—Agathocles of Syracuse—Mr. Morland—Sandown Fort—Brading Down—The Set Down.

" This vault of air, this congregated ball,
Self-center'd sun, and stars that rise and fall,"
Are all for me; I view them with delight,
In spite of kings, and claim them for my right;
Leave sloth to fools, and from the active toe
Draw more than pride can give, or kings can know;
Sink down at eve with rapture in my breast,
And pity those who make my toils their jest.

THE church clock struck out the hour of six as I passed the mill at Stride; when having a great desire to visit the shores between Boniface and Bembridge, I left Pan-Down, took the ready way westward, and after a pleasant walk of six miles arrived at

APPULDERCOMBE PARK,

The seat of Sir Richard Worsley.—The house is of stone, well built, and exceedingly beautiful in all its proportions.—The site is tastefully chosen, being a fine lawn perfectly sheltered from every unpleasant wind of the compass. After some difficulty I obtained permission to view the interior adornments; and that difficulty was not removed but with the powerful key which opens the double door of the cabinet to shake the fidelity of the statesman; that tempter which, like the most corrosive menstruum of the laboratory, dissolves the iron bars of confinement, and even the hinges of the miser's chest.

The great Earl of Pembroke remarks in the preface to his catalogue, that such was the passion in his time for collecting sculpture of Greek and Roman antiquities, that many gentlemen who were themselves without ability to discriminate, became the prey of artful designing men; every kind of rubbish that could be raked from the ashes of time was new vamped, and sold for incredible sums. This sort of ware, the noble Earl tells us, he carefully avoided, and only made choice of such as incontrovertibly retained the marks of perfection and originality. Of the first sort principally consist the Worsley collection, where it is no uncommon thing to behold the ancient caput of Demosthenes the orator, with an under jaw of modern manufacture; the heads of the Cæsars new noselled; Tully, with a new eye made nearly to match the old one; and the snub-nos'd Socrates with two odd ears. However, the pictures are less exceptionable; Sir Richard has many cabinet pieces by the best masters, and these in the finest condition.—A very appropriate ceiling piece adorns the centre of the great library, the advice of Dædalus to Icarus—" Soar not too high;"—the work of our own countryman, Athenian Stuart. Here are several so-so copies from great masters, particularly one from Rubens on the principal stair-case—Daniel in the Lion's Den—which might serve very well some itinerant Roscius for a show-cloth at a country fair. To describe all the apartments at Appuldercombe would be tiresome; but one room must not be left unsung, because, as Shakespear has it,

" Thereby hangs a tale,"

To instruct the sportsman; and to shew him, that if he wishes to hold the the bird secure in his hand, how ridiculous it is to return it to the bush.

The apartment I mean is best known by the name of

THE BATH.

The Diana of this fountain was also lady of the mansion.—It was in these cool shades, in these refrigerating waters, she delighted most to sport with her domestic nymphs, and her lord Actæon knew well her propensities: he would often indulge unseen, through an aperture he had fashioned for the purpose, in the contemplation of those beauties better concealed under the veil than delineated by the tongue of eloquence. Had he been contented with contemplating those charms alone, all had been well; had he been wise enough to keep these secret beauties to himself, he had been still the happy lord of Appuldercombe: but alas! in one fatal moment—

"Was it meanness? was it madness? was it folly?"—

Our hero told all his secret pleasures to his friend Bissetini, invited him to the very spot, and to participate in his raptures; they stole together to the aperture in the bath; 'twas Actæon's request, while Diana was sporting in the enamour'd flood, and Bissetini mounted on his brawny shoulders, to behold the goddess; she saw the curious gazing visitor, and reprobated the conduct of her foolish lord; soon fled with Bissetini from Appuldercombe, and fixed the horns for ever on the brow of her Actæon.

The park, though of no great circuity, abounds with pleasing variety: the obelisk raised by Sir Richard's progenitor, to testify his gratitude to the founder of his fortune, is a very pleasant object from many situations; the delapidated castle on the rising ground to the eastward, has a good effect in the landscape; the various springs, the fine-conditioned deer, the ample covers well stocked with birds of game, and the sheep-covered lawns, are all delectable; as is the south walk that leads to St. Lawrence, where Sir Richard has planted

THE VINEYARDS.

The citizen who has never had an opportunity to visit the wine-countries, may here find an ample field for gratification; for the gardens of Picardy and Burgundy are not better cultivated. These vineyards were projected some time since by Sir Richard, to emulate those on the shores of France; they are three in number, and so well sheltered from cold and storms in every quarter, that little apprehension is entertained of what is called the Scotch blight or nipping mildew, so adverse to the growth of the vine. They are near to the sea-shore, and so far to the southward, as from the sun and the other elements to receive a fertilizing nourishment equal to a more favoured climate than England. One of these vineyards contains ten thousand standard vines, and from its present appearance promises to yield, as I am assured, in about the space of two years, twenty-five hogsheads of wine. These vines were brought from Anjou, in France, which is the most northern province in that country; producing good wine, the colour and taste like Rhenish, and whose vines were first brought into France from the banks of the Rhine. The other two are of a more delicate nature as to the species of the wine, and may produce from three to four hogsheads, after the second year. The

The vigneron who planted the vineyards is a native of Anjou, and in his profession a very skilful man; he took up the plants with great care, and they were packed so well in large pipes, that they suffered very little from the exportation and transplanting. The baronet is in hopes of great success, and has written a treatise to encourage the growth along the southern shores of the kingdom.

After a most perfect gratification within the pales of this sylvan retreat and the vineyards of St. Lawrence, I entered the premises once the favourite retirement of the late Governor Stanley. The dwelling is partly situated under a cliff, with a parlour added to it of a very pleasant and convenient construction, well adorned with sea-pieces by the most approved masters. From a chink in a lofty part of the cliff a fountain rushes, and dashes romantically from crag to crag, till half-way down it becomes imperceptibly lost; then rises again in a capacious shell directly before the parlour window, but never overflows its margin; for, by the ingenuity of the artificer, the water as it rises to the level of the shell is disgorged by pipes, till it appears once more in the lower region of the cliff, and there runs murmuring into the sea. Here is a long slip of garden ground running under the rocks, beautifully cultivated and adorned; and its covers give at this moment harbour to a thousand song-birds, with whose melody, while making my remarks, I was almost fascinated. Here is also a work of art placed in the centre of the little lawn, well worthy the attention of the traveller: it is a vase of prodigious magnitude, modelled from a work of Michael Angelo's, by the late celebrated Mr. Bacon, and brought to the present consistency at Mr. Code's manufactory, at Lambeth.

The various groupes about it make up the story of

AGATHOCLES OF SYRACUSE.

Agathocles, tyrant of Syracuse, one of the greatest men and of the finest genius ever produced in Sicily, was the son of Charinus, a potter of Sciacca, and born in that city. His father having consulted the oracles, concerning the dreams by which he had been disturbed during the pregnancy of his wife, was told, that the child she should bear would lay waste his country. Sacrificing his paternal tenderness to the good of his fellow-citizens, Charinus determined to expose his son, and leave him to perish; but his wife, more of a mother than a patriot, prevailed on the persons employed to execute the design, to preserve the life of her child, and convey him to the house of his uncle Heraclides, by whom he was privately brought up. The young Agathocles daily increased in beauty and strength; and when he was seven years old, his uncle celebrated a sacrifice in his house, inviting his brother-in-law to be present at the ceremony. Charinus perceives Agathocles, and his eyes seemed rivetted on the boy. The mother, who was on the watch, artfully reminded him, that her son, if living, would be of the same age. Tears flow from the eyes of Charinus; he caresses his own son without knowing him, and while he affectionately views the child, reproaches himself with his cruelty, and gives way to all the violent emotions of affection and despair.—The mother seizes the moment, discovers to him the imposition, and the transported father takes home with him his son, determined to risk every event.

History

History scarcely affords a subject so interesting for the painter, and I cannot help expressing my suprise, that I have never yet beheld these scenes on the canvas.

Close to the gates of this marine pavilion stands a house of refreshment, best known by the name of The Crab and the Lobster. I entered this dwelling, and was comfortably supplied with refreshment of a very delicious nature; it was of crabs and lobsters dished up in a stile of peculiar delicacy. The rocks are near at hand from whence these sea scorpions are taken in the greatest abundance; and it is amazing to the inmates of a city like London, to look on the economy of these crustaceous creatures in their own element, and about the basement of the rocks, where they are trapped by the fishermen.

A story is told here in a pleasant way by the master of the cabin, respecting the conduct of the late

MR. MORLAND.

That artist, it seems, had for some time lodged at Crab-niton, in company with several other sons of the palette, and had been giving way largely to all those frolics peculiar to men of eccentric characters. One day towards the close of the evening, Mr. Morland observing an old man and a boy coming ashore from the rocks, where they had been planting their bait for the larger shell-fish, proposed to his associates to have, what Morland called a little fun, and to hoax the fogoes at their return in the morning; when having procured materials for the purpose, they went out together, took the bait from all the traps, and deposited other things in the stead. At day-break, George and his companions went out to enjoy from some hiding-place the disappointment of the old fisherman and his boy, who presently appeared, to the great delight of the bush-covered painter and his party; for instead of recovering their traps full of profit, up came in one pot an old mop, in a second an old wig filled with a stone, a third for crabs and lobsters presented a bunch of turnip tops, and so on in this kind of aggravating progression to the enjoyment of the concealed junto, but infinitely more to the chagrin of the poor old fin-finder and his companion, who presently returning by the place of Morland's concealment, were heard to swear most vehemently, that the devil had been there, and had that night played them a pretty trick, or that some privateer's lousy crew had come among the rocks exercising their damned rogueries.

Although this might be good sport for the painters, it might be death to the old man, for he was deprived of the fruits of his labour, and the profits of the market which supported his family.

The crabs and lobsters of this place are of a prodigious size, some of them weighing eight pounds; and I am told some have been taken at ten. These are boiled, and sold for three-pence a pound on the spot; and are sent overland to the surrounding markets, where the adventurer often makes cent. per cent. profit of this traffic.

In my way eastward, a thousand objects grateful to the eye awakened my attention, and excited my admiration; but one surpassing all the rest appears between Steeple and Boniface, which is a landscape for a Claude.

I had now reached Shanklin: the sun was at the meridian, and the heat became intolerable, but for the breezes arising from the sea. I would would have sheltered in the chink; time, however, urged me to pursue my way along the coast, till I arrived at Royal-Heath, where the pretty modest retreat of the late celebrated John Wilkes, of patriotic memory, caught my sight; and, breaking suddenly upon my fancy, I mistook it for a brilliant diamond glittering in the centre of drapery of the purest green.

From this fairy abode I descended through a very singular aperture to visit

SANDOWN FORT,

The only place on the south side of the island that lies open to an invading enemy; however, though it owes nothing to nature, it is strongly fortified by art, and at all times well garrisoned by the military.

An accident happened here some time since of a very unpleasant complexion, and serves to shew in the strongest colours the necessity of a strict attention to duty and good discipline.

A French privateer about the close of the evening stood right into the bay, and soon after sculking under the shore, came unperceived within gun-shot of the fort; when hailing, the men turned out disorderly to know the cause, and the marauders instantly poured a broadside among them, wounded and killed seven privates and a corporal, and then, sans ceremonie, made their best way towards their own shores. The Culver Cliff here is particularly well worthy attention; it exhibits a tremendous high wall perfectly erect, and composed of rocky stone of a very durable texture.—Considered as a work of sportive nature, it is of wonderful regularity, and has the appearance of an old rampart or castle wall. As you view it in a straight line, together with its perpendicular height, one would easily imagine it, for several miles in length, to be the offspring of human labour in some long-passed, indefatigable age. What is farther remarkable, this cliff is at least half a mile from the highest water-mark of the sea, and the intermediate land as fine a level, and as pleasant a track, as any in the island.

Quitting Culver, I resolved to visit Dun-nose, where I determined to shelter, and to that end made up to a fisherman's cabin, cool as Calypso's grotto, and thickly covered with kelp, or weeds of the sea. I was greatly fatigued, and entered the cave—" The night to the owl and morn to the lark are not less welcome."—It was my retreat for a full hour.

The while I was thus refreshing myself, the muse attended, and on a spare leaf of my pocket book, I wrote

THE COT BY THE SEA.

Where is Care to be lost? where is Health to be found?
Where is Labour with Quiet incessantly crown'd?
Where does Pride and Ambition disdain to be seen?
With the ills of Pandora lamenting between?
Truth whispers me soft, and with Truth I agree—
In the fisherman's cottage that stands by the sea.

The hangings that grace the rude mansion within,
Are an old tatter'd net on a strong oaken pin;
The hearth made of rock-work without any bars,
An old pair of water-boots, two broken jars;
A truss of clean straw, which gives comfort to me,
In the fisherman's cottage that stands by the see.

When

When the tempest howls rude, and the salt waves mount high,
And seem, in the distance, to war with the sky;
When the sea-gulls scream loud, and fierce lightning descends,
Fear troubles him not—his old boat he defends,
Puts on his rough cap, puffs his short pipe with glee,
And, content, waits the calm in his cot by the sea.

If no golden treasures are dealt him by fate,
(To be happy 's a blessing scarce known to the great)
No dun can torment him, no lawyer perplex,
And the tax-man ne'er knocks at his cabin to vex.
Be't mine to enjoy all these blessings as free
As the fisher, who dwells in his cot by the sea.

I now turned up one of the fisherman's old jars, placed my verses on the bottom, with at least an ounce of tobacco, that he might perceive a friend had visited his cave during his absence, and, quitting this aquatic temple of quiet, pursued my way.

I turned inland, and having passed Sir Nash Grose's peaceful hermitage, penetrated a deep cover, and soon found myself on the top of

BRADING DOWN.

It is hardly possible for our best painters to do justice to the singular excavation below the down.—The lake, it is true, is not of vast circumference, but there is something at first view so fascinating, that the beholder conceives all beneath him the land of faires, and in its centre the water of enchantment. The entrance to this ample bason from St. Helens is so shallow that only small vessels can be admitted, and of these only one at a time.—The moment I was taking a bird's-eye view of these waters, the herbage that surrounds them is at the full growth, which, together with its bloom, and the different-coloured birds floating on the surface, form a fine picture for the imagination of the man of genius.—O! Wilson, how I sigh to think these beauties never furnished employment for thy divine pencil. It is very singular, and upon inquiry I could not find a reason for the neglect—these waters are never thought worthy the attention of the fisherman, notwithstanding they are constantly fed by inland fishes and the ocean; and yet it is not many years since a valuable discovery was made in them by the master of a Cowes fishing-boat.—The man was bound to Havant for a cargo of oysters, and being overtaken near Cumberland Fort by a strong north-easter, a heavy sea forced him into this bay, where having beat about for some time he determined to dredge the bottom, when, to his unspeakable astonishment, he drew up the article for which he was outward-bound; he eagerly examined the whole bottom, and found a mine of wealth.—He freighted his vessel and returned. The fish were delightful, and the profits certain and speedy; but for want of a little common cunning, his advantages were of short duration: like the old fool in the fable, he was for cutting up the goose to come at all the eggs at once; for the passage being but short, he must make two trips to his neighbours' one.—This created a jealousy, he was watched and discovered; all hands went to work to partake of the advantage, and Brading Bay was presently stripped of its delicious treasures. However, as I am told, it is in contemplation to try the bay again.

The manner in which this species

cies is propagated, has never been clearly ascertained; they cast their spawn in the month of May; it resembles the drop of a candle, and is about the size of a farthing: this cleaves to stones or other matters at the bottom of the sea; and what seems extraordinary, the young oyster is perfectly formed and has a shell in twenty four hours. The parent oysters are sick and reckoned unwholesome after spawning; but in July they recover, and in September are in perfect health and high flavour. After learning these things from some countrymen I met in my way, I quitted this charming part of the island, returned through Araton, where the land turns up as red as vermillion. Iron ore is found in great abundance; and, after a sharp walk of 28 miles, was glad, with my faithful dog, to sit down once more at Newport.

HELPS AGAINST DROWNING.

MR. Nicholson has published the following direction, by which a person may save himself from drowning:—If a man falls into deep water he will rise to the surface by floatage, and will continue there if he does not elevate his hands; and that the keeping them down is essential to his safety. If he moves his hands under the water in any way he pleases, his head will rise so high as to allow him free liberty to breathe.—And if, in addition, he moves his legs exactly as in the action of walking up stairs, his shoulders will rise above the water, so that he may use less exertion with his hands, or apply them to other purposes.

SINGLE-STICK PLAYING.

IN the village of Botley, near Southampton, there was played, on the 8th instant, the grandest match at single-stick that perhaps ever was witnessed in England, or, at least, by any person now living. The match was, as last year (this being the second year), instituted and supported by those Gentlemen and Farmers in that part of Hampshire, who, to use the words of their advertisement, were desirous "to encourage, to reward, and to honour bravery and hardihood, from whatever part of England they might come." The Prizes were two in number; the First Prize, twenty guineas and a gold-laced hat; the Second Prize, ten guineas and a silver laced hat. From the celebrity of last year's match, a great number of spectators were expected, and preparations were made accordingly, by the erection of benches and standing places in every part of the village near the stage, which, being twenty-five feet square, and seven feet high, stood in a spot where the players could be conveniently seen by every one present. At an early hour in the morning the people began to arrive in all directions; and before nine o'clock, the hour appointed for beginning, there were at least four thousand persons assembled. The moment the clock struck, Leader, a player from Somersetshire, threw his hat upon the stage, that being the mode of challenging. The challenge was instantly accepted by Harris, a Hampshire man; and the playing at once began by a contest that lasted about half an hour, between two of the strongest, most hardy, and most active men that appeared during during the day. The playing for the First Prize was concluded about three o'clock, and, as will be seen from the following list, the victor was Bunn, whose Christian name is James, and who comes from Widmore, near Wells, Somersetshire. The first column of the list exhibits the Players, in the order that they mounted the stage; the second column contains the names of those who broke two heads each; the third those who broke three heads each; and the fourth column, the name of the conqueror of the whole. The initials, S. H. and W. placed against each man's name, shew the county to which the Players respectively belong.

Leader, S.
Harris, H.	Harris.
Line, W.		Bunn.
Palmer, W.
Bunn, S.	Bunn.
Ellis, W.
Ackerman, W.			Bunn.
Morgan, H.	Morgan.
Popham, S.
Pope, W.		Wall.
Wall, S.	Wall.
Summerset, W.
Morton, H.	Langtry broke Morton's head, but gave in to Slade, who, for want of time, could be allowed to wait for no other combatant.
Langtry, S.
Slade, H.

Thus it will be seen that, in playing for the First Prize, the superiority lay between Hampshire and Somersetshire, and that, of these two, the latter proved superior, Wall and Bunn being both of that county, and, indeed, both of the same parish. The Wiltshire men played well; they were all strong, active, and brave; but, upon this occasion, the day was against them; and, if they were conquered, they might safely say that it required the very best men in England to conquer them. The defeat of Summerset, who won the first prize last year, after a terrible contest with Singleton, appeared to be an object of great mortification with his countrymen; but his combat with Wall was one of the best that ever was witnessed, the antagonists being uncommonly well matched in every respect, and each of them appearing to feel that upon his exertions depended the honour of his county. When the Hampshire men and the Somersetshire men came to decide which should claim the superiority, an increased interest was excited. Harris, who had to contend with Bunn, was greatly his superior in point of size and strength, and his equal in bravery; but, in activity his antagonist surpassed him. Between Morgan (who won the second prize last year) and Wall, though the former was decidedly inferior in point of strength, the contest was long and most desperate, and though Morgan was finally vanquished, the admirable activity and undaunted courage that he displayed, will make him the pride of Hampshire, and more especially of the the village of Bramdean, of which he is a native. Between Bunn and Wall, men from the same county, and even the same parish, it would have been hard to insist on a contest, had not the rules of the match required that one of the two heads should be broken; but, under such circumstances, the battle might be considered as a drawn one, and the honour as equally divided between the combatants.—The Second Prize was played for by some of the men who had been defeated in playing for the first prize, and by some fresh hands, one of whom came from Berkshire. The prize was won by Line, a Wiltshire man, who was an excellent player, but who had been defeated by Bunn, in the contest for the first prize. Each Player, who came from any other county than Hampshire, received half-a-guinea to bear his expences home.—Several Gentlemen in company with Mr. Stephen Neate, who is a great patron of the art, came up from Devizes, in Wiltshire. The five Somersetshire Players, all of them apparently labourers, came alone; and, the moment the playing was over, went out of the village together, waving their prize-hat in the air, and shouting "Huzza for Somersetshire," which was heartily echoed by the spectators. The conduct of all the players, without a single exception, was exemplary in the highest degree; that of the umpires, Mr. William White, of Alresford, and Mr. Stephen Bushel, of Andover, was perfectly impartial and judicious; and the business of the day, from nine in the morning until near seven in the evening, was conducted without a single dispute. During the whole of this time the playing continued; and the spectators, who before twelve o'clock amounted to at least seven thousand, remained to the last, apparently undiminished in numbers. No fighting or squabbling took place in any part of the village during the day; nor was there, as far as the observation of the writer of this account extended, any drunkenness, until after the close of the match. The assemblage upon this occasion had in it no part of the character of that vile thing which we denominate a mob. The feats upon the stage were too powerfully attractive of admiration, too well calculated to inspire feelings of the higher order, to suffer the intrusion of the petty passions, too frequently connected with frivolity and buffoonery. For one day, at the close of the harvest, care and labour gave place to the exhibition at Botley, whence the spectators, retiring in every direction, carried to their families and their neighbourhoods the lessons of bravery and of fortitude which they had that day received.—It is with great pleasure that the writer of this account has perceived that a match similar to the one at Botley, is to be played in the city of Salisbury, upon the 24th and 25th days of this month.

FOOT RACE.

Palace Court, September 5.

BIFIELD v. J. GROOM

THIS action was brought to recover of the defendant the sum of £9 : 19 : 6—it was laid to prevent a removal into any other court; that sum, or that amount, having been put into his hands as a stake-holder, to abide the event of a foot race between the plaintiff Edward Bifield, and William Groom, the brother of the defendant. The bet was, that Bifield and Groom should run five miles for five pounds each; and the former not being of equal celebrity, was to be allowed five minutes, which he might take first or last. Bifield chose the latter, and his counsel, Mr. Hart, contended that as he had won on that point, he was entitled to recover.—He then called his witnesses.

Thomas Hanmer was present at the making of the bet, and at the staking the deposit. Bifield being at the moment short of money, he staked his watch and a seven-shilling piece against five pounds and another seven-shilling piece. He was at the race, and indeed ran before them. It was not a regular five miles they ran; it was from the Plough at Little-Ealing, to the Red Cow at Hammersmith. Groom certainly came in first; but Bifield well saved his time of five minutes allowed him.

Richard Weston, in his examination, spoke to the same points precisely; cisely; but on his being cross examined by Mr. Agar, wholly altered the case. The bet was made, not simply for a running-match, but a walking-match; the parties were to come heel and toe to the ground each time, or forfeit. Mr. Bifield, in place of doing that, ran right on as long as he attended, which was, till he saw he had lost; and he could not on his oath say he had lost.

The Judge held there could be no pretence for the action; and the plaintiff was nonsuited.

WEST KENT MILITIA.

Court Martial held on several of the Officers at Colchester.

MR EDITOR,

AN imperfect copy of the sentence and proceedings of the above court having appeared in the public prints, I beg your insertion of the following. Yours &c.

A. B.

THE Court having duly examined the witnesses produced, in support of the charge, as well as those brought forward by the prisoners in their defence, and having thoroughly investigated and maturely weighed the whole of the evidence for and against the prisoners; is of opinion, that they are fully convicted, and guilty of the first part of the said charge, viz. "conducting themselves in a manner prejudicial to good order and military discipline, on the fourth day of September, 1805, and at divers other times afterwards, in the said month of September, and since."

And in regard to the second part of the charge, viz. "combining together, and in consequence of such combination, systematically and contumaciously, absenting themselves from the society of the field officers and captains, and studiously avoiding all intercourse with the field officers, excepting Col. Dyke and Lieut. Colonel Dalton, and with the greater part of the captains, viz. Captain J. Rutton, Major Shaw, (then Captain) Captains Best, Burgess, Davies, Shelly, and Thompson." The Court is of opinion that the prisoners are guilty.

And in regard to the third part of the charge, viz. "and with Lieutenant West, first assistant surgeon, on account of his having refused to join in the said combination, to the prejudice of good order and military discipline; also with Ensigns Thankfull, Wilmott, and John Wilmott." The Court is further of opinion that the prisoners are guilty in breach of the articles of war, and does therefore adjudge the prisoners, Lieutenants Birch and Nicholl, to be dismissed from his Majesty's service; and the remaining prisoners, Lieutenants Bishop, Atkins, Ramsden, Richardson, and Bath, to be dismissed from his Majesty's West Kent Regiment of Militia.

The Court having considered, that from Lieut. Birch's time of life, his experience, and the respectable situation he held as Paymaster of the Regiment, he had some degree of influence on the unfortunate young men implicated in the charge; and also having discovered a spirit of overbearance and insubordination in the conduct of Lieut. Nicholl, the Court has made a distinction in their sentence.

In passing judgment on so large a body of officers, the Court feels itself bound to animadvert on the pernicious system which evidently appears to have been introduced and acted upon in the West Kent regiment of Militia, and it is with the greatest concern the Court has observed the aggravating conduct of those, who, from their rank in the regiment, ought to have set a better example, and whose indispensable duty it was, after the prisoners had acknowledged their error, and retracted their resolution of not speaking to, or holding any intercourse with, their superior officers, to have extended their fostering protection, and directed those, who from their youth and inexperience, may be supposed to have been misled, whereas it appears, that certain officers, since that explanation, have refused to meet, or exchange the common civilities with the prisoners, by which that harmony and concord would be restored to the regiment, which is so essential to promote the good understanding and unanimity of the whole: the conduct of those officers has been of a nature the most aggravating, certainly calculated to inflame, rather than to heal the existing evil.

The Court feels itself further bound to testify the high sense it entertains of the liberal and dispassionate manner in which the prosecution has been conducted by Lieutenant Colonel Dalton, whose endeavours to reconcile the unhappy differences that prevailed in the corps, and whose motives for resorting to the only means left him of re-establishing the harmony and preserving the discipline of the West Kent Regiment, appears highly meritorious.

THE BOAR'S HEAD.

THE following is from a manuscript of the well-known Anthony Wood, dated 1660:—

"There is a custom at Queen's College, Oxford, to serve up every year a boar's head provided by the manciple against Christmas day.—The boar's head being boiled or roasted, is laid in a great charger covered with a garland of bays or laurel, as broad at bottom as the brims brims of the charger. When the first course is served up in the refectory, on Christmas day, in the said college, the manciple brings up the said boar's head from the kitchen, to the high table, accompanied by one of the tabarders, who lays his hand on the charger. The tabarder then sings a song, and when he comes to the chorus, all the scholars that are in the refectory join together and sing it:

The Boar's head in hand bear I,
Bedeck'd with bays and rosemary,
And I pray you, Masters, merry be,
Quotquot estis in convivio.
CHORUS.
Caput Apri defero,
Reddens laudes Domino.

The Boar's head, as I understand,
Is the bravest dish in all the land,
Being thus bedeck'd with a gay garland;
Let us servire convivio.
CHORUS.
Caput Apri defero,
Reddens laudes Domino.

Our steward has provided this,
In honour of the King of Bliss,
Which on this day to be served is
In reginensi atrio.
CHORUS.
Caput Apri defero,
Reddens laudes Domino.

HUMOROUS CONJECTURES ON HEARING GUNS FIRED.

MR. EDITOR,

PASSING, a few evenings since, along the west end of the town, and hearing at least twelve discharges of cannon, I was so much puzzled and perplexed by the different reports of all the persons of whom I inquired the occasion, and more especially by the appearance of a news-boy with a paper in his hat vociferating with the voice of a Stentor bloody news!! that I was determined to have recourse to wiser heads than my own, and accordingly entered a public-house in the neighbourhood, which has long been celebrated for the resort of evening politicians, whose lucubrations, as they themselves are ready to assert, have very materially contributed to the prosperity of this country; nay they even aver, that few ministers can proceed without them. But, be this as it may, I found the good company very busy in accounting for the unusual sounds which had broken upon the stillness of the night; therefore, depositing myself in a corner, I listened very attentively to their conversation:—

A sagacious looking personage, who, from his gravity and bulk, seemed actually intended to fill a chair, sucked his pipe greedily for two or three whiffs, then, taking it from his mouth, declared, with a look of infinite importance, "that in his opinion it was all smoke!"

"Excuse me, Mr. President, (interposed a strapping fellow, who I discovered was a barber) "I thinks as how we have given Monseer a lathering."

"I'll bet a pot of beer (cried a fishmonger) that brother Jerome's taken in Cochrane's net, and looks as flat as a flounder."

"Nonsense (roared a butcher) we've cut master Boney on the flank, and are going to have a prime peace!"

"That's all gammon," (vociferated a dealer in bacon); when the debate, which was carrying on with much vehemence, was interrupted by the entrance of the landlord, who destroyed all our airy castles by informing us, that the great guns proceeded from a party of fencibles upon the river.

CURIOUS

CURIOUS ASSAULT AND CRIM. CON.

Clerkenwell Sessions.

MRS. Mary Higgins, a responsible dealer in oysters, muscles, periwinkles, &c. &c. from the purlieus of Carnaby Market, was indicted for violently assaulting a female friend named Elizabeth Bradley. From the testimony of the prosecutrix it appeared, that the defendant is the wife of a shoemaker, who carries on his leathern operations in a room contiguous to the stall of his rib; that Mrs. Bradley, who was an acquaintance of the family, one day paid them a morning visit, either for the purpose of tasting Mrs. Higgins's oysters, or having her shoes heel-tapped by her friend Crispin. But as those friendly meetings are seldom deemed cordial without a modicum of gin or anniseed, just to oil the wheels of affection, Mrs. Higgins was detached with her pocket pistol for a pint of Hodges's best high-flavoured juniper, leaving her sposo and her female friend tête-a-tête; but on her return with the reviving elixir, what was her astonishment and indignation to find her sposo and her friend in a situation not to be named! The gin-bottle flew at their heads in an instant: lasts, lapstones, hammers, and pegging awls followed in quick succession. Mrs. Higgins bristling up with anger, waxed exceeding wrath, and brandishing the boot-trees, threatened to close her husband's days, and put an end to his life.

"Conscience makes cowards of us all."

Crispin, terrified at the vengeance of his enraged sposa, apprehensive of a severe leathering, and not liking the size-stick with which she threatened to measure his head, abandoned his quarters, took to his heels and vamped off without ceremony, leaving his frail gossip to receive from Mrs. Higgins a complete welting in black and blue, from which no craft could save her: although she sought to conciliate the ire of Mrs. Higgins, by assuring her that her husband was as much to blame as she was. Mrs. Higgins, satisfied with the ample damages she had taken of her rival, had no notion of proceeding to Doctor's Commons for further revenge: but Mrs. Bradley thought fit to prosecute for the assault. Mrs. Higgins acknowledged the fact, and was of course subject to a verdict of Guilty, and fined one shilling.

GREYHOUNDS AND FOX.

An Etching.

SOMETIME in the month of March last, as Mr. Frisby, Mr. Gardner, and a few friends, were coursing with greyhounds, in the neighbourhood of Wood Ridden, on Epping Forest, Mr. Gardner's greyhound bitch made a full stop at a bush in a field adjoining the Forest. Upon one of the party beating the bush, up started a fox, which the two greyhounds (depicted in the annexed engraving) immediately pursued. On their coming up, the black dog, being severely bit by the fox, turned tail, but Mr. Gardner's bitch, the light one, seized poor Reynard, and held him till Mr. Gardner's servant lad laid fast hold of him by the nape of the neck. On consulting how to dispose of this singularly caught animal, it was determined to present it to Mr. Conyers of Copt Hall,

Hall*, who, keeping fox hounds, reserved it for a day's sport. It is to be noticed, that Mr. Gardner's bitch (the light one) has lost part of her tail.

BURKE AND O'DONNEL.

Trials at the Old Bailey.

IT is not a little discreditable to the science of pugilism that the above named professional boxers have both been convicted of felonies at the Old Bailey Sessions this month.

BURKE.

Burke's trial took place with that of an accomplice on Wednesday the 16th of September, and the report of it is as follows:

Joseph Burke and James Travers, the former a pugilist of celebrity, were capitally indicted for stealing in the dwelling-house, a five pound note and a guinea, the property of William Gee. It appeared that on the 11th of June last, Mary Gee, the wife of the prosecutor, gave a five pound note and a guinea to Thomas Ruddy, her husband's apprentice, desiring him to pay a bill. On his way he met Burke and Travers, who persuaded him to go with them to a public-house in Carlisle Mews; where Burke pretended to be drunk, said he had just returned from Newmarket, that he had made some lucky hits, and proposed some bets to Travers. He then addressed himself to Ruddy, and offered him a bet, which the latter declined. Burke and his companion insisted upon his making a bet, or at least that he should pay for the porter. Ruddy then said, that all the money he had in his pockets belonged to his master, and that he was going to pay a bill with it. He then pulled out the five pound note and a guinea, in proof of what he had asserted, when Burke snatched it from him, and having left the guinea at the bar in payment for the porter, while the change was preparing, slipt out of the house. Ruddy followed, and insisted upon having his masters note returned. Burke ridiculed and laughed at his concern, and set him at defiance. At length Ruddy grew more seriously pressing for his note, and Burke took a counterfeit note from his pocket and threw it at him. Ruddy was proceeding to examine the note, when Burke said it was his own note, and bade him put it in his pocket. Ruddy suspected some foul play, but as Burke made a second snatch at it, he secured it without further investigation. After getting the change of the guinea, he parted from the prisoners, and when alone discovered that the note he had got was a sham one. Application was made at the public office, and Burke and Travers were apprehended. A second counterfeit note was found upon Burke.

Mr. Alley observed that the capital part of the charge must be done away, as the stealing, if any, was not in the dwelling-house, but from the person.

Mr. Gurney, who conducted the prosecution, acquiesced in the propriety of the objection, and the prisoners were found Guilty only of Larceny. This saved their lives, but subjects them to transportation for seven years.

O'DONNEL.

John O'Donnel, Samuel Carter, and John Gore, were indicted for burglariously breaking and entering the the house of Jonathan Kendall, and stealing therefrom Bank notes to the amount of £60.

Jonathan Kendall, and his servant, Martha Woodfarm, described the situation of Mr. Kendall's premises. From their testimony it appeared that the prosecutor kept the tap of the Worcester Coffee-house, which was situated under the house, but totally detached from it; it consisted of a tap-room, a parlour, and a bed-room opening from the parlour. They saw the notes on the 28th of August, and on the 29th they were missing from a bureau drawer which stood in the bed-room on that day; all the prisoners were drinking in the house together with another man of the name of Cuddeford.

The next witness called was Cuddeford, who was an accomplice in the robbery, and turned approver. He stated that on the 28th of August he saw Gore, who was son to a baker in the neighbourhood of Oxford-road; and the witness told him, he knew where there was some money to be got at. He had observed the prosecutor go into the bed-room whenever he wanted any change, and from thence he conjectured he kept his money there. Gore asked where it was, and said, he should like to try at it. He then informed him respecting Kendall's money, and said, as the key always hung in the bar, one of them might easily slip it down, and get into the bed-room. The next morning they met at the tap by agreement, and Cuddeford, the witness, got the key unperceived, and gave it to Gore, who went then into the parlour, but returned immediately, and observed he should not want the key, as the bed-room door was open. Cuddeford replaced the key, and Gore again went into the bed-room, but shortly returned, and said the bureau was locked, and he had broken his penknife in attempting to open it. They then went away, and met again in the evening. The witness said he would go and fetch Jack O'Donnel, which he did, and brought back him, and the other prisoner Carter. O'Donnel began capering and singing to divert the attention of the landlord and his servant, while another of them went through the parlour into the bed-room. The witness sat himself down in the door-way between the tap-room and parlour, to obstruct the view of what was passing in the inner-room; Gore went in, and finding the bureau open, he carried off the notes; they afterwards went to a public-house in Saint Martin's-lane, and divided the booty.

The Officers by whom the prisoners were apprehenhed, corroborated many of these facts.

O'Donnel, in his defence, professed his innocence of the charge imputed to him, and maintained that the money found on him was his own property, which he accounted for by stating that he had lately fought two battles, by which he gained £100.

Gore also declared that he knew nothing of the matter.

Many witnesses of respectability gave him an excellent character, stating that he worked with his father, to whom he had also served an apprenticeship.

After a very distinct charge from Sir Manners Sutton, the Jury returned a verdict, finding all the prisoners guilty of stealing in the dwelling-house, but not of breaking and entering. In this way, however, the crime is a capital offence, the sum stolen being above Forty Shillings.

FEAST OF WIT; OR, SPORTSMAN'S HALL.

JUDGE Toler, now Lord Norbury, to whom Robert Emmet observed—" If all the innocent blood he had shed since he became Judge was collected in one reservoir, his Lordship might swim in it,"—was at a public dinner with Curran, the celebrated Irish lawyer. Toler observing Curran carving a piece of corned beef, told him, " if it was hung beef, he would try it."—If you try it, my Lord, (replied Curran) I am sure it will be hung."

A TRAVELLER observes that Air-shire in Scotland, was once famous for Poets, and Fife-shire for Musicians.

ON an edifice, partly a Methodist Chapel, and partly a Wine-cellar; by the late Dr. Dunkin:

BACCHUS and Phœbus here in honours, club,
The Vintner's hogshead, and the Preacher's tub;
The Preacher and the Vintner here combine,
As this intoxicates with cant, so that with wine.

AT a late trial for Crim. Con. one of the witnesses, a simple fellow, who lived in the family, was asked, if he ever suspected that the lady in question was unfaithful to her husband's bed? He said, " he never did, for he could safely swear that he did not believe there was a woman in the kingdom that loved her bed better."

CLASSICAL WIT.——A Gentleman of the name of Homer, being in company some days ago, was suddenly obliged to rise from table; one of the party wishing to shew his wit, turned to his friend on the right, and remarked, Homer's odd, I say. Oh, no, replied the other, " Homer's ill, I add."

THE late Mr. G. Stackpole, observing that every set of servants cheated their master, said, that as he could not expect better luck than his neighbours, and did not wish any of his property to go out of his own family, he would hire his from among his own relations; he did so, and it was not uncommon to hear him call out, when his table was full of the first respectability, " Uncle Tom, tell cousin Dick to go down to the kitchen, and acquaint aunt Betty that she has roasted the mutton to rags.

COPIED from an American Paper.——" To be let, the most enchanting Farm in America, which in truth may be called the Eden of Columbia. A spot selected by the hand of taste, from the volume of nature, and afterwards embellished by art.—This paradise in miniature, is planted with the whispering pine, and trembling aspin; watered with rivers that warble as they roll; and encircled with hedges, flowered with eglantine, and even vocal with sylvan song. This delicious retreat lies within two miles of Bennington," &c. Let novel writers excel this description if they can.

WHEN our Cits make a fortune sufficient to enable them to retire, their line of business may be traced in their country houses.—The Grocer's box resembles a cannister or tea-chest; tea-chest; the Sugar Baker's, a cone; the Tailor's hedges are clipped with shears; the Booksellers doors are in folio, his dining windows in quarto, his bed-chamber windows in octavo, and his garret ones in duodecimo; the Tobacconist, if his chimneys smoke, is indifferent about the rest.

A DUSTMAN has lately turned Methodist; his address at the end of his first Discourse to his hearers was very appropriate.——" Down with your dust."

A BEGGAR in Dublin had been a long time besieging an old gouty, testy, limping gentleman, who had refused his mite with much irritability; upon which the mendicant said,—" Ah, please your Honour's honour, I wish God had made your heart as tender as your toes."

VOLTAIRE being asked what he thought of a fat heavy-headed nobleman at the court of Berlin—" Why," said the wit, " I think he has brains of pap, in a skull of wet paper."

EPIGRAM.

ON AN UGLY TALKATIVE OLD MAID.

IF you'd marry, first get young,
Wear a mask, and hold your tongue.

REFINEMENT of Manners.—A person having some business with a master sweep, was told by the maid, that her master could not be seen, as he was in company with another gentleman.

LITERAL copy of a letter written by a country gentleman to his apothecary:

" DEAR SIR.—My sun from a fal from his hors has got a confusion in his head, I am myself also verry bad with the embargo (lumbago) com as fast as you can, and bring some of your stuff with you."

RETURN

To a notice respecting persons liable to serve in the Militia, left at the house of a single Lady,

NOT a male in my house,
Excepting a mouse,
To repel the proud Corsican foe ;
But when times are so bad,
That men cannot be had,
I, a spinster, will willingly go.

A FELLOW being recently condemned to be publicly whipped, addressed the Judge thus :

" My Lord, I'll submit to the punishment if you insist upon it, but I don't like it ; I might be a good scholar now, if I had been fond of that amusement at school. "

FOREIGNERS imagine that the distribution of the inhabitants of London, are so arranged, that Poets only reside in Air-street; Gluttons in Swallow-street; Money-lenders in Golden-square; and Creditors in Bond-street.

A CERTAIN Hibernian Lady has a custom of saying to a favourite little dog, to make him follow her, " Come along, Sir. A would-be-witty gentleman stept up to her one day, and accosted her with—" Is it me, Madam, you called?" " Oh, no, Sir," said she, with great composure, " It was another puppy I spoke to."

ON its being told a private performer, that he had rather too much brass, he archly enough replied, " It was well he had too much of that, for he unfortunately felt he had considerably too little gold."

A PAWNBROKER, who had married a second wife, was trumpeting forth forth her praise, which he wound up by saying, that "she was the exact duplicate of his first rib.

Among other captivating descriptions of the advantages and glories of a military life, recently advertised, we read of "Young gentlemen wanted for beautiful and elegant regiments of cavalry, with horses and dresses finer than any Eastern Emperor,"—and "to complete noble regiments of infantry about to sail to the Golden World."—"None but gentlemen of high character and truly noble spirit need apply!"

A journalist says, that a person may as well expect to find the word hospitality in a Dutch dictionary, as to look for the word liberty in a German one.

Charming Poetry.—A country rhymer, has produced the following beautiful couplet on the recent marriage of a Mr. Frost, to a Miss Snow:

"'Tis love subdues the cold and wayward dame,
"And fans huge lumps of Frost and Snow to flame!"

Two gentlemen, remarkable for a nice appetite, were disputing lately at a coffee-house upon the best mode of cooking a beef-steak, and were enumerating the different processes for bringing it to table in the highest perfection. Mr. Wewitzer of Drury-lane theatre, who was present, observed, that "of all the methods of cooking a beef-steak, he thought Shakespeare's recipe to be the shortest and the best." Upon being asked for an explanation—"Why, Gentlemen," said Wewitzer,

"If when 'twere done, 'twere well done,
"Then 'twere well it were done quickly,"

A provincial paper, giving an account of a bruising match between two men of the names of Hill and Potter, concluded by saying.—"That after sixteen rounds, Hill beat his antagonist hollow.

Clerical Arithmetic.——Sixteen Welch Curates make a Rector; ten Rectors a Pluralist; five Pluralists, a Dean; four Deans, a Bishop; and two Bishops, an Archbishop.

A girl is now exhibiting in Yorkshire with two tongues. He will indeed be a bold man who will take the damsel as his wife.

Legal Pun.—A Lawyer on the last Western Circuit, who made a very long and saucy speech, was upbraided by another as being very Garrowles.

The late Lord Avenmore, although a man of distinguished talents, was too apt to anticipate the tendency of an argument. A celebrated Lawyer, whose client had suffered in consequence of this habit, took the following method of reproving it:—being engaged to dine in company with the Noble Lord, he delayed going so long, that the company were at dinner when he entered the room: he apologized for his absence, apparently with much agitation, stating that, from a melancholy event he had just witnessed, he found himself unable to master his feelings:——"I was passing through the market," said he, "a calf was bound to a post; the butcher had drawn his knife, and was just advancing, when a beautiful child ran across him; and O! my God! he killed"—"the child!" exclaimed his Lordship. "No, my Lord, the calf; but your Lordship is in the habit of anticipating."

SPORTING

SPORTING INTELLIGENCE.

A NOVEL scene took place at starting for the Gold Cup at Egham on Tuesday the 2d inst. the whole of the horses walked for the first mile, each rider having been instructed not to make play, and which they strictly observed for the first mile; after which commenced severe running, the first four running head and head, and continued so until within a few lengths of the Ending-Post.

On the above day, the Course at Egham was attended by all the Nobility and Fashion of the surrounding country, and never was known to be more thronged. The Dukes of York and Cambridge were on the ground, and Her Majesty and Princesses Mary and Elizabeth also honoured the company with their presence.—The Royal Party were in three barouches, attended by a numerous equipage. The Steward for the Meeting was Benjamin Torrin, Esq.

Lincoln Races were better attended this year than usual, and the Sport proved superior to what has been known for 30 years past.

We are informed, that Richmond Races will in future, be run for in October:—The sport at that place has been very much upon the decline since the commencement of Pontefract. In the year 1759, and all the succeeding years, Richmond Meeting has been held early in September; that year was the first commencement of the Gold Cup, which was won by the Duke of Cleveland's Dainty-Davy, by Traveller, who also won the Gold Cups at Richmond in the four following years. The Cups are in possession of the present Earl of Darlington. In 1759, Danty-Davy was seven years old, and beat Charmer, Brisk, Brutus, Osmar, Young Sedbury, and Matilda: In 1760, he beat Silvio and Encore; in 1761, he beat Silvio; in 1762, he beat Silvio, Syren, Pompey, and Fearnought; and in 1763, he beat Silvio, Negro, Blackeyes, &c. In 1764, the Gold Cup was won by Silvio, beating Shuttle, King Richard, and Carleton: Dainty-Davy was then out of training. A circumstance similar to the above, is not equalled in the annals of racing.

The Macaroni Stakes run for at Pontefract, on the 10th instant, was one of the finest races that ever was rode for by gentlemen.—Mr. Dumcombe's horse, by Acasia, and Miss Cheesecake, ran close together for a considerable length, both keeping their ground; and being severely pushed and whipt, which was to be successful appeared doubtful to every judicious sportsman; but the race was won by the former by only a head.—At the time of starting, 100 to 3 was offered against Mr. Duncombe's horse, who was rode by Lord Pollington, (son of the Earl of Mexborough); and Major Creyke rode Miss Cheesecake. After the race, Sir George Armytage purchased the winner of Mr. Duncombe.

Messrs.

Messrs. R. Wardell and T. Richardson of York, have purchased of Mr. M. Browne of Grimstone, near that city, the brown colt, got by Hambletonian; dam by Weasel; grandam, (Dapple, Allegro, and Trafalgar's dam) by Ancaster, Damascus Arabian, Sampson, Oroonoko, Mirza's sister, by Lord Godolphin's Arabian, Hobgoblin, Whitefoot, Leedes, out of Queen Anne's Moonah Barb Mare. The price, we understand, is 200gs. He is a very racing like colt, and being out of a Weasel Mare makes him of greater value.

For the King's Plate at Lincoln, there is a dispute whether Richmond-Lass carried the proper weight. It is to be referred to the Jockey-Club.

Lord Fitzwilliam sold Caleb Quote'em, after running on Friday in the last York August Meeting, to Lord Montgomery, who has sent him to race in the north for the remaining part of the season. —The price, we are informed, is 1000gs.—Caleb Quote'em is qualified to run for two Plates of fifty pounds at Stirling; for the King's Plate and a 50l. Plate at Carlisle; for two 50gs Plates at Dumfries, &c.

Sir George Armytage, Bart. has purchased of Mr. Kirby, of York, a two years old colt, by Beningbrough, dam by Drone, out of a daughter of Dux, for 250gs. Sir George has since matched him against Mr. Peirse's bay colt, by Beningbrough, out of Constantia, to run at Doncaster in 1807.

Mr. Garforth's favourite Marcia, who was intended to race no more; we can with authority state, is to set off immediately after Doncaster Meeting, to run for the King's Plate at Carlisle, on Wednesday the 15th of October; after which she will proceed to Dumfries to run for the King's Plate, given to the Caledonian Hunt, on Monday the 20th of October; she is also qualified to run for two Plates of 50gs each, at Dumfries.

Mr. Thomas Tarleton, of Boldsworth-Castle, Cheshire, has sold the produce of Jack Tar's dam, (if a colt) by Shuttle, to Charles Smith, Esq. for 200gs.

Mr. George Hutton sold Cleveland to Lord Monson, after winning twice at Lincoln: He was got by Overton, out of Charmer, the dam of Hugh Lupus, Saxoni, &c. Charmer was got by Phænomenon; her dam by Fitzherod, Young Cade, Regulus, Snake, Partner.

The galloway Sweepstakes, 10gs each, five subscribers, run over Brighton Course on Thursday, the 18th, was won easily, by Mr. Shoubridge's ches. mare, Brighton-Lass.

Captain Stanhope's b. g. beat Captain Gurley's b. g. 12st. each, the New Course, for 100gs.

Captain Gurley's gr. g. Little John, afterwards beat Captain Stanhope's br. g. Distance, &c. as before, by which Captain G. recovered his former loss.

On Friday the 19th instant, a poney, eleven hands and a half high, the property of a horse-dealer, of Chard, Somerset, started from Honiton, for a considerable bet, to go one hundred miles in sixteen successive hours; the ground chosen for the purpose was from Honiton to Exeter, a distance of sixteen miles, which he was to go over six times, with an additional four miles afterwards. He set off from Honiton a quarter past four in the morning, arrived at the hotel, in that city, a quarter before six; returned to Honiton, and arrived secondly at the same place at ten o'clock, and again for the third time at three o'clock in the afternoon; went off perfectly fresh, and completed the distance with the greatest ease in thirteen hours and fifty minutes, being two hours and ten minutes less than the given time. The poney was rode the whole way by one lad, whose weight was little short of ten stone.

In the beginning of the present month, one of the best-contested one-mile races that was ever witnessed, took place on Lansdown, near Bath, between Mr. Lewis's black mare, Chip, and Mr. Fielder's b. g. Rafter, rode by the owners. The ground was contested every inch, and the first declared a dead heat. They ran it over again, nose to nose all the way; and it was impossible during the running to judge which would ultimately have the advantage; but the umpire Mr. Partridge, gave the race in favour of Chip—by the thickness of a shaving.

A BET was lately made of 100 guineas between two knowing ones, that a small mare belonging to Mr. Robert Mason, would trot 28 miles within two hours; and on Thursday morning the mare started from Springfield, near Chelmsford, and after the most strenuous exertions, the humanity of its rider, who very fortunately was its owner, prevented the poor animal from being quite destroyed, by stopping at the 25th mile, on finding that it could not possibly reach its destination within the limited time.

MR. Bell, of Manchester, engaged his chesnut mare to trot 16 miles in one hour, for 200gs. She performed the distance in 59 minutes. There was a great deal of betting.

COCKING.

OXFORD.—During the Races, the third great Main of Cocks was fought between the gentlemen of Oxfordshire, (Eaton, feeder) and the gentlemen of Berkshire, (Fisher, feeder) for 10gs a battle, and 200gs the main.

NEWCASTLE.—In the Race-week, 1807, a long Main of Cocks is made to be fought between Charles Brandling, Esq. and Cuthbert Ellison, Esq. for 20gs a battle, and 1000gs the main. Sunley is engaged to feed for Mr. Brandling. Mr. Ellison has not fixed.

COURSING.—Two very large matches of greyhounds are now depending betwixt Mr. Cave Browne and Mr. Burton; and it is understood Mr. Swinten has been desirous of running ten matches with Mr. Mellish. There can be little doubt of such an offer being accepted by Mr. Mellish, whose greyhounds have distinguished themselves so highly.

A MATCH of pigeon-shooting took place the 15 instant, near Willsdon, between a Mr. Paget, from Long Court, Bucks, and a game-keeper of the name of Hurst. The number of pigeons allotted to each was eleven; Mr. P. missed his first and ninth bird. The game-keeper misssd his fourth and eleventh, and in shooting off the ties Mr. Paget missed his third bird, which decided the wager of 50l. in favour of his opponent.

Foot Race.—In the Year 1771, Chr. Orton undertook to run from Middleham to Richmond, Yorkshire, in one hour; which he performed in 57 minutes. It is 10 computed miles, moderate road, remarkably hilly, particularly the finish up to Richmond bar. Several horses were much distressed to keep up with him, and one died on the road.

Lately a gentleman in Musselburgh, undertook to run from the coalpits near that place to Dalkeith, a distance of two miles and a half in one hour, with his eyes bound up; and he accomplished the task in 40 minutes.

A tradesman of Manchester undertook, on the 26th ult. for a wager, to walk from that town to Buxton, and back again, in fourteen hours; and though the weather was very unfavourable, and the road consequently bad, he performed the journey in twelve hours and twenty-five minutes.

On Sunday, Sept. 7, a man named Hargrave, aged 74, of East Smithfield, undertook for a wager of five guineas, to go on foot from Whitechapel Church to Snaresbrook, in Essex, and back again, in the space of three hours, the distance being thirteen miles and a half; he started at twenty minutes after four o'clock, he arrived at Snaresbrook at forty-five minutes after five, where he stopped three minutes, refreshed himself with a glass of brandy and a biscuit, immediately set off again, and reached the place from whence he first started at twelve minutes past seven, completing the whole in eight minutes less than the time allowed: he appeared not in the least fatigued. A good deal of money was won and lost.

Sunsday morning, Sept. 7, as early as six o'clock, the Knights of the Last from Wapping Wall to Hyde-Park Corner, assembled in Saville-row, to witness the decision of a singular wager, in which one of their body, called Running Jack, was to pick up 100 stones at the usual distance of one yard from each, in 44 minutes, which he performed in 43. The wager was for 10s. 10 pounds of beef-steaks, and 10 gallons of beer. Running Jack is this morning, for 20 guineas, to run one mile in Hyde Park, in five minutes.

Mr. Ensor, clerk of Highgate-Chapel, undertook for a wager of 50 guineas, to walk 26 miles in four hours: he started from the four mile stone at Hammersmith, at seven o'clock, and went the first seven miles within the hour; he reached the 17 mile stone beyond Colnbrook, in one hour and 50 minutes, and returned to the place from whence he started, without stopping, 17 minutes within the time allowed. Several persons accompanied him on horseback.

At five o'clock in the morning of Sunday the 21st inst. a walking-match took place between a Jewess of the name of Mordecai and one Mark Levy, for five guineas a-side, from Whitechapel church to the two mile stone on the Mile-End road, and back again. At first setting off the man kept a short distance a-head, but was overtaken by the female before they arrived at the one mile stone, who passing him, kept a-head to the end of the journey, where she arrived about four minutes before her antagonist, completing the distance in 45 minutes. A great number of spectators were present at starting; bets were two to one in favour of the man, he being only 24, and the woman woman 46 years of age. A great deal of money was won and lost on the occasion, and the knowing ones were taken in.

Two young gentlemen, brothers, from the neighbourhood of Cheadle, near Manchester, went last year to one of the adjoining counties, to shoot moor game, and in two days were so far successful as to kill 107 birds. The elder, attended by a younger brother, went last week to the same place, and in the same time killed 82; a circumstance unparalleled in that neighbourhood.

LUSUS NATURÆ.—The following singular fact may be depended upon. A partridge of an extraordinary description was this month shot by Samuel Smith, Esq. in the vicinity of Rickmansworth; it has two necks branching from the body, in the form of the letter V, both of which are in every respect complete; the eyes in either head appear to have been equally perfect, though they are somewhat disfigured by the shot; and it is supposed the creature used both bills in feeding, although the left one is evidently most rubbed. It is a young bird, fat, and in fine feather. Mr. S. is induced to think there are other curiously formed birds in the same covey, and has ordered his game-keeper to endeavour to take them alive.

MR. CLUTTERBUCK, of Watford, killed no less than 14 brace of birds and 13 hares, on the first day of shooting, in about seven hours.

WE have heard from some friends in Wales, that grouse-shooting has been carried on with much animation and success this season. One gentleman, however, who is short-sighted, is said to have killed a goat instead of a bird.

THE Reading Mercury observes: "As a proof of the abundance of game this season, a farmer in the neighbourhood of Highworth, in the county of Wilts, on the 1st instant, before eight o'clock in the morning, exhibited to a person who called upon him on business, 20 brace of birds, and 10 brace of hares."—We believe the sportsmen in this neighbourhood have a very different tale to unfold of their sport, which, from what we can learn, has hitherto proved generally flat; so much so indeed, as quite to make game of shooting.

THE Hare and the Hedge-hog.—One day lately, as a farmer in the neighbourhood of Lewes, Sussex, was traversing his fields, his attention was attracted by the cries of a hare, when, on going to the spot from whence the signal of distress appeared to come, he was astonished to find the timid animal suffering under the painful bite of her prickly assailant, who had seized the hare by the foot, and would probably have held her till she had died, had it not been for the interference of the farmer, who gave liberty to puss, and death to the hedge-hog.

THE propensity of dogs to worry and destroy sheep in the night, has recently been severely felt in the valuable stock of Colonel Anstey, of Ibsley House, Hants.—Ten sheep, three lambs, and a Spanish ram, of the Merino breed, have been killed.

THE following is a remarkable instance of the sagacity of a dog:—A harrier, bought by a gentleman near Swansea, was conveyed by sea to Bristol, and from thence to the vicinity of Yeovil, Somersetshire; but the animal decamped from his new situation, and in four days after found his way back to Swansea.

THE HIGH COURT OF DIANA.

COMING HOME FROM THE FAIR.

THE storm in howling triumph drove along,
The street-door slamm'd as hous'd the flying throng;
And hats left owners, to enjoy the race,
While caps and bonnets kept an equal pace.
Here sprawls a squalling brat, and there a stall,
Which toys and tinsel'd soldiers have let fall;
The ladies legs flung up their skirted covers,
The cloak, once careful Sue's, is now another's;
The dust in large unwelcome volumes whirl'd,
The stifling smoke was down the chimney hurl'd;
The yard-dog howl'd, the sudden uproar join'd,
And down came torrents which appear'd the wind.
Now bare-head Sue, and cloakless Betty run—
To those well shelter'd no small share of fun—
Half-choak'd with fury, "could they this forebode;
Thus stript and sous'd, and in a public road!"
Tom Drover whistles, Vulcan heaves his bellows,
Loud shouting——"Ladies, who's for London, tell us;"
While some cry "Coach"—the coachman never heeding,
Drives swift along, or waits a better feeding.
Now rolls a drunkard from the tap-room door,
There squeaks a fiddle, and there jigs a whore.
See boxing Ben display his feats of valour,
His pipe was broke, a broken head must follow;
Some on a donkey show equestrian parts,
Some, more genteel, jaunt on in tilted carts.
In daddy's arms see Master Dicky dangles,
And a whole furlong spousey sulks or wrangles;
While some come chaunting home in roaring measure,
Another sits, and swears he toil'd for pleasure.

SHANKLIN CHINE.

YE fops and coxcombs! what care I
For plays or ladies fine?
Such sights I'd quit without a sigh,
To visit Shanklin Chine.

Ye topers too! who vainly think,
That nothing equals wine;
I'll give you leave to sit and drink,
So I'm at Shanklin Chine.

Ye lovers! who with aching hearts,
Delight to rave and whine,
Ye'd better fly from flames and darts,
And come to Shanklin Chine.

Ye tender maids! whom slighted love
Condemns to droop and pine,
Ah! seek a refuge in the grove
Which shadows Shanklin Chine.

Ye limners! who with pencils soft,
Can draw the finest line,
O follow me, and come aloft
To look down Shanklin Chine!

Ye poets! who would fain, I ween,
Your brows with chaplets twine,
We'll find for you some ever-green,
In our sweet Shanklin Chine.

Ye lawyers! modest set of men!
Who never fees decline;
In quiet ye your briefs may ken,
At peaceful Shanklin Chine.

Ye parsons! who from narrow sight,
With jealousy repine;
I'll tell you who will set you right:—
Our priest at Shanklin Chine.

Ye doctors! when we want your aid,
We'll make some well-known sign;
While all is blithe, be ye afraid
To enter Shanklin Chine.

There's not a spot in Britain's Isle
Which does more charms combine,
The lagging moments to beguile,
Than lovely Shanklin Chine.

If I could chuse my dwelling-place,
And she I love was mine;
I'd leave the money-getting race,
And hie to Shanklin Chine.

But now, alas! to say the truth,
Your poet needs must dine;
And therefore hopes some other youth
Will praise sweet Shanklin Chine.

THE COCK AND A BULL.

A FABLE.

A BULL, who'd listen'd to the vows
Of a seraglio of cows,
And serv'd his master fresh and fresh,
With hetacombs of special flesh;
Like to an hermit, or a dervise,
Grown old and feeble in the service,
Now left the meadow's green parade,
And sought a solitary shade.
The cows proclaim'd, by mournful mowing,
T[illegible] bulls deficiency in wooing;
And to their disappointed master,
All told the terrible disaster.
"Is this the case," quoth Hodge, "O rare!
But hold, to-morrow is the fair;
Thou to thy doom, old boy, art fated,
To-morrow—and thou shalt be baited."
The deed was done—Curse on the wrong,
Bloody description hold thy tongue—
Victorious yet the bull return'd,
And with stern silence inly mourn'd.
A vet'ran, brave, majestic cock,
Who serv'd for hour-glass, guard, and clock;
Who crow'd the mansion's first relief,
Alike from goblin and from thief;
Whose youth escap'd the Christmas skillet,
Whose vigour brav'd the Shrovetide billet;
Had just return'd in wounds and pain,
Triumphant from the barb'rous main.
By riv'lets brink, with trees o'ergrown,
He heard his fellow-suff'rer moan,
And greatly scorning wounds and smart,
Gave him three cheers with all his heart.
Rise, neighbour, from that pensive attitude,
Brave witness of vile man's ingratitude;
And let us both, with spur and horn,
The cruel-reasoning monster scorn.
Methinks at ev'ry dawn of day,
When first I chaunt my blithsome lay;
Methinks I hear from out the sky—
"All will be better by and by;"
When bloody base, degen'rate man,
Who deviates from his maker's plan;
Who Nature and her work abuses,
And thus his fellow-servants uses;
Shall greatly, and yet justly, want
The mercy he refus'd to grant;
And, when his heart his conscience purges,
Shall wish to be the brute he scourges.

ON A FOX CHASE.

BUT when the red arrows of Death shall be hurl'd,
And we bid adieu to the sports of this world:
In the next, to grim Pluto we'll down on our knees,
With prayr's to unkennel such foxes as these.

On Monday and Tuesday, 2 to 1 and 7 to 4 only against Trafalgar; but on Wednesday, the betting suddenly rose to 5 to 1 against him.—Something it was supposed had happened to him. At starting, 4 to 1 against Sir Frank Standish's filly, 5 to 1 against Paris, 5 to 1 against Achilles, 6 to 1 against Trafalgar, 10 to 1 against Lord Egremont's b c, by Gohanna, out of Catherine, 10 to 1 against Mr Wilson's Young Hambletonian, 12 to 1 against Podargus, 12 to 1 against Clasher, 100 to 4 against Hector, 100 to 3 against Luck's-All, 100 to 3 against Rapture, and 100 to 2 against Ploughboy.

At half past one they started, and ran at a great rate; on turning Tottenham Corner, it was observed, that John Shepherd, who rode Paris, rather pulled, whilst Trafalgar was making play; notwithstanding, Lord Egremont was backed to win: upon coming to the Distance-Post, Trafalgar and Paris were neck and neck, in which situation they continued until within a few yards of the Winning-Post, when Shepherd made a desperate push, and won the race by about half a head.

There was as usual, a very numerous and genteel assemblage of visitants. His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales honoured the company with his presence, and alternately rode with Lord Darlington and Sir John Lade. Lord Foley and Mr Mellish were the principal winners.

Eight and 10 to 1 on Fortune.—Won in a canter.

THURSDAY, June 26.—The Gold Cup, value 100gs and upwards, by 16 Subscribers of 10gs each, the surplus to be paid to the winner in specie; three-year olds 6st 3lb, four-year olds 7st 12lb, five-year olds 8st 8lb, six-year olds and aged 9st.—Four miles.

Mr Baillie's ch c by Star, out of Gratitude's dam, by Walnut, 3 years old, (R. Robinson).. 1
Sir W. Gerard's br h Young Chariot, 5 yrs old, (W. Peirse)........ 2
Mr G. Hutton's br c Cleveland, by Overton, 4 yrs old............. 3
Mr Brandling's b c by Shuttle, dam by Walnut, out of Little Scot's dam, 3 yrs old.. 4
Sir T. Gascoigne's gr c Drum-Major, by Delpini, 4 yrs old........ 5
Mr Storey's b c Cramlington, 3 yrs old.......................... 6

Five to 4 on Young Chariot, and 2 to 1 agst Mr Baillie's colt.—Young Chariot made play, and Mr. Baillie's colt waited until they came nearly opposite to the Stand, when he passed his antagonists, and won very easy. It was a most excellent race between Young Chariot and Cleveland, the former beating Cleveland about half a neck. Drum-Major was lame before starting.—R. Robinson rode Mr. Baillie's colt in a most masterly style, and gave great satisfaction to the racing people; even more so than when he rode Lord Strathmore's colt agst Marcia and Sir Paul at Doncaster last year.

The Maiden Plate of 50l. for all ages.—Three-mile heats.

Mr Horton's b c Young Bustard, by Bustard, dam by Sir Peter Teazle, 3 yrs old, 6st 10lb, (J. Jones)..................... 4 1 1

THURSDAY, July 24.—A Match for 2000 guineas, 8st 7lb each.—Four miles.

Lord Darlington's b h Pavilion, by Waxy 1
Mr Mellish's b h Sancho, by Don Quixote 2

Some days previous to the race, 6 and 7 to 4 on Sancho; the day before running, 5 and 6 to 4 on Pavilion, on a report that Sancho was not well. About two o'clock the horses came upon the ground; Pavilion was first, and was attended by a great concourse of company, who seemed highly pleased at his fine appearance and condition. Mr. Mellish led Sancho a little about, before his rider mounted: he appeared much out of condition, and as if he had not had a gallop for some time. Expectation was then raised to its extreme height, and the moment of trial at length arrived: the horses started about fifteen minutes past two o'clock. Betting, 11 to 8 on Pavilion, who started without the word, and was called back; soon after they both started, and Pavilion took the lead at the top of his rate, leaving his antagonist about two lengths.—The betting at that time even.—At the two miles they turned well, Pavilion having gained no further advantage of his adversary.—Betting even, and 5 to 4 on Pavilion. About a mile and a quarter from home, Sancho came up to his opponent, and they ran for some time neck and neck; after which Sancho took the lead about a length.—Betting, 2 and 3 to 1 on Sancho, who continued leading in a gallant stile.—In the last half mile, 4 and 5 to 1 on Sancho; Pavilion appearing to be completely beat. When they had about a quarter of a mile to run, Sancho began to be lame, and about the Distance-Post he broke down in the fetlock-joint of his near fore-leg, whilst leading to great advantage; which gave Pavilion the race, by cantering in. It is thought that Sancho will not be able to start again.—Pavilion was rode by Young Sam Chifney, and Sancho by F. Buckle.

Mr Mellish's Lady Brough, 8st 5lb, against Mr Howorth's Elizabeth, 7st 1lb.—Four miles, 300gs.—Off by consent.
